82nd CONGRESS--

1951 PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATIONS

215 of 26,284 Not Approved; Dozen Provide Controversy

SUMMARY

The Constitution provides that the President shall nominate, "and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," shall appoint all high officials of the executive and judicial branches of the government and officers in the Armed Forces.

Between March 4, 1933, when Democrats came into power, and the Oct. 20, 1951 adjournment of Congress, Presidents Franklin D. Roosevelt and Harry S. Truman sent 339,316 nominations to the U.S. Senate for confirmation. Most of these were approved without controversy.

But the handful that was challenged fired some of the hottest debates heard in the chamber and lobbies of the Senate each year.

The 1951 session was no exception. Only 215 of the 26,284 nominations sent to the Senate were not approved. Not more than a dozen were the centers of sharp controversies -- but those which did produce conflict resulted in a lot of heat.

The dozen included disputes over the Jessup nomination to a U.N. post; Gen. Clark's nomination as envoy to the Vatican; the unsuccessful nomination of two chairmen of the Subversive Activities Control Board; and the rejected Truman nominations of two federal judges in Illinois.

POSTMASTERS

The President nominated 1,326 persons for postmasterships--at least one in every state except Delaware. 1,177 were confirmed; none were rejected; 12 were withdrawn by the President and 137 were unconfirmed when the session adjourned and will have to be renominated in 1952 if they are to get appointments.

As postmaster nominations are almost always cleared with the Congressmen from the state concerned, there are few controversies over postmasterships. In practice, the President usually nominates a man approved by the state's Senators and selected by the Representative in whose district the vacancy occurred.

If the Representative and Senators are not members of the President's party, the nominations frequently are cleared with the state organizations of the President's party. There were no major controversies over postmaster nominations in 1951.

Postmasters accounted for fewer than half of the civilian nominations made during the year. This was a change in the ratio over earlier years of the Democratic Administration. Postmasters outnumbered other civilian nominees nine or ten-to-one in the middle thirties.

The other civilian nominations--executive officers, judges, diplomats, etc.--pulled ahead of postmasters in 1946 and remained ahead in all but one session of Congress thereafter.

OTHER CIVILIANS

The President made 1,521 nominations of civilians other than postmasters. The Senate confirmed 1,471 of these; 28 were withdrawn; 20 were not acted on, and two were rejected.

The two rejects were the only outright refusals of the year. Several nominations were rejected in effect when the Senate failed to complete action on them before adjournment 1951.

According to Senate rules, all nominations not confirmed before the annual adjournment or before a recess of 30 days or more automatically must lapse. The nomination of Gen. Mark W. Clark to be ambassador to the Vatican, for instance, must be resubmitted in 1952 if the President is to win his fight. Gen. Clark was nominated on the last day of the session.

The nomination of Philip Jessup to a United Nations post was rejected through the device of non-action.

The two outright rejections were the President's choices for federal judges in Illinois. After Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) declared the nominees were "personally obnoxious" to him, the Senate voted to reject the nominations.

Civilian nominations during the year to jobs other than postmasterships were to such places as the United States Court of Appeals, the President's Cabinet, various special boards and commissions and to U.S. embassies abroad.

They included many non-controversial nominations, including those of Harold R. Medina to the U.S. Court of Appeals, Robert A. Lovett to be Secretary of Defense, Dan A. Kimball to be Secretary of the Navy, Eric A. Johnston to be Economic Stabilization Administrator, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt to be a U.S. Representative to the United Nations, Stanton Griffis to be Ambassador to Spain and W. Averell Harriman to head the new Mutual Security Agency.

Posts were filled without controversy on the Civil Aeronautics Board, the Atomic Energy Commission, the Federal Communications Commission, and the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Some of the nominations, however, stirred up long controversies in the Senate. Details on these are noted in the following pages.

Illinois Judgeships

The Senate rejected two nominations to judgeships for the Northern Illinois Federal District Court. The President's nominees were opposed by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.).

On July 13 President Truman submitted the names of three candidates to federal judgeships in Illinois. One of the men, Joseph S. Perry, former Democratic state legislator and county chairman, had been recommended by Douglas and by former Sen. Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.). He was confirmed without opposition.

The other two had not been cleared with Douglas. They were Joseph Jerome Drucker, nephew of Rep. Adolph J. Sabath (D Ill.), and Cornelius J. Harrington, a Cook County circuit judge.

For those two posts, Douglas had recommended William H. King, Jr., former president of the Chicago Bar Association, and Benjamin P. Epstein, a judge of the Cook County circuit court.

On July 17, Douglas challenged the President's nominations. He asked the Chicago and Cook County, Ill., bar associations to take a poll of their members to decide whose candidates were better qualified, the President's or Douglas'. The bar associations agreed to take the poll.

Douglas said he thought Mr. Truman's nominees are "worthy men" but felt his own candidates had "superior qualifications".

The three lawyer polls favored Douglas' candidates. The polls were conducted by the Chicago and Cook County bar associations, the Illinois Bar Association and by the Chicago Sun-Times, which queried 12,000 lawyers.

Judiciary Committee hearings on the President's appointees opened Aug. 4. Douglas testified against Drucker, saying he was "an estimable man" but that "the manner and method by which this nomination was made was personally obnoxious." He added that he had recommended a "better qualified" man.

Rep. Sabath urged approval of Drucker's nomination, but said he regretted "that the President had not consulted with the Senator."

Douglas appeared before the Committee Aug. 10 to oppose confirmation of Harrington. His objections were the same.

At a closed session Oct. 8, the Committee voted to recommend rejection of Drucker and Harrington. The Senate considered the nominations Oct. 9 and rejected them on voice votes after Douglas repeated his contention that the manner of selecting them was "personally obnoxious" to him.

Philip C. Jessup

The President Sept. 12 sent the Senate his slate of nominees to be United States delegates to the Paris United Nations meeting to be held late in 1951. On the list were Philip C. Jessup, Warren R. Austin, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, Reps. John M. Vorys (R Ohio) and Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) and six alternates.

The Jessup nomination was opposed by Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy and by Harold Stassen, former governor of Minnesota. Other persons named were approved without controversy.

A subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted against Jessup. The full Committee did not act before the end of the session. Jessup, however, went to the UN meeting under a recess appointment by the President.

The Subcommittee fight over Jessup opened Sept. 27 after McCarthy asked for a chance to present testimony. On the Subcommittee were John J. Sparkman (D Ala.), chairman, J. William Fulbright (D Ark.), Guy M. Gillette (D Iowa), Owen Brewster (R Maine) and H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.).

McCarthy told the group he felt Jessup was "unfit to serve" because he had "an unusual affinity for Communist causes." He brought along documents he said showed Jessup had been associated with six Communist front organizations.

McCarthy appeared again Oct. 2. He cited testimony given Oct. 1 by Stassen before the Internal Security Subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee, which, McCarthy said, showed that Jessup had followed a policy of softness toward Communist China.

Jessup took the stand Oct. 3 and denounced McCarthy's charges. He said he had never been affiliated with four organizations named by McCarthy and denied that the other two, the American Law Students' Association and the Institute of Pacific Relations, had ever been cited as Communist fronts.

In denying that he had followed the Communist line, Jessup said that "prior to Dec. 7, 1941, I was an active member of the America First Committee." He said the Communists dropped their non-intervention stand when Hitler invaded Russia June 22, 1941.

UN Delegate Austin defended Jessup Oct. 4 telling the Subcommittee that Jessup was a "powerful protagonist" of American interests with no trace of Communist sympathies.

Stassen, in a series of appearances before the Foreign Relations Subcommittee (Oct. 8, 15) and the Internal Security Subcommittee (Oct. 1, 6), made the following charges against Jessup:

In an October, 1949, State Department round table, Jessup had favored recognition of Red China;

In a Feb. 5, 1949, White House meeting, Jessup had proposed cutting off aid to the Chinese Nationalists;

Jessup and Secretary of State Dean Acheson had been responsible for a "pattern of action" that undermined the China Nationalists, and a similar plan was afoot to turn India over to the Communists.

Jessup replied to Stassen in appearances before the Foreign Relations Subcommittee Oct. 4, 5 and 17. He said:

The United States "has never considered the recognition of Communist China" and he had helped formulate the non-recognition policy;

Records showed that he was not present at the White House meeting;

A State Department spokesman also denied in a statement that any Departmental official had ever advocated recognition of Red China. The Department also said that Jessup had had no hand in the delays in sending famine relief to India.

On Oct. 18 the Foreign Relations Subcommittee voted to reject the Jessup nomination. Sparkman and Fulbright voted for Jessup; Gillette, Brewster and Smith voted against him.

Smith released a statement saying he voted against Jessup because he felt his confirmation "would divide the country at a time when above all else we need unity."

While saying he had known Jessup for many years and had "absolute confidence in his integrity, ability and loyalty," Smith contended the "real issue" was "the approval or disapproval of our over-all Far Eastern policy." Jessup, he said, "has been identified with those forces" responsible for the policy "which has led to the present crisis."

Gillette declared he opposed Jessup because of a "considerable segment of our people who lack confidence" in him. He added that "in large measure this lack of confidence in Dr. Jessup may well be due to the concerted campaign of unfair and unprincipled attacks..."

"There is no reason for me to question" Jessup's loyalty or to conclude he had "any improper association with subversive groups," said Gillette.

Jessup was given a recess appointment Oct. 22 to be United States delegate to the United Nations.

In making the interim appointment, Mr. Truman said the objections to Jessup voiced before the Committee "bordered on fraud," were "erroneous, and in some cases, simply the result of partisan politics." He added that "the Senate has confirmed Ambassador Jessup five times for position of great trust; three confirmations were for the identical position to which I am now appointing him."

The UN session was scheduled to close before Jessup could be renominated in January.

Chester Bowles

On an almost strict party-line division, the Senate approved the appointment of Chester Bowles, former governor of Connecticut and former OPA Administrator, to be ambassador to India.

Bowles was nominated Sept. 12 to fill the post left vacant when Loy W. Henderson went to Iran.

A Foreign Relations Subcommittee questioned Bowles Sept. 22 at a closed door hearing. The Subcommittt voted 3-2 on party lines Sept. 25 to confirm the nomination. H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.) said he opposed Bowles mainly because the Committee was not consulted in advance about his nomination. Owen Brewster (R Maine) said Bowles was not qualified for the post.

The full committee voted 8-2 Oct. 1 to approve the nomination. Smith and Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa) were reported to have voted against it.

The Senate Republican Policy Committee agreed Oct. 3 to fight the nomination. Chairman Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) said the group felt Bowles lacked experience and was "not a natural-born diplomat."

Opening floor debate on the nomination Oct. 9, John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) urged speedy confirmation because of the "growing threat of communism in all Asia." Bowles' lack of experience, he said, "will undoubtedly be offset by his native ability, enthusiasm and personal qualities."

However, Taft, leading the opposition to Bowles, countered, "I can't think of any man less qualified than Chester Bowles" for the post. As a price control administrator during World War II, Bowles "antagonized" both Republicans and Democrats, Taft said.

Only one Democrat--Pat McCarran (Nev.) -- joined the 32 Republicans opposing Bowles. Five GOP Senators stood with the 38 Democrats favoring the nomination.

Clark Nomination

The President Oct. 20 nominated Gen. Mark W. Clark to be ambassador to the Vatican. The nomination was not acted on before Congress adjourned for the year later the same day. Nor did Congress act on the Presidential request to pass a special bill to permit Clark to keep his Army status while on the diplomatic assignment.

Mr. Truman said Oct. 23 that Clark would not be given a recess appointment. Clark would have had to resign from the Army in order to accept an interim job. The nomination thus will be left pending until the 2nd session of the 82nd Congress opens in January, unless it is withdrawn.

Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman Tom Connally (D Tex.) said he would oppose the nomination as Clark "showed himself unfit" for high office during his command of United States troops in Italy during World War II.

H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.), committee member, said he was "happy" over the nomination as it would help the free world combat communism. Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa), also on the committee, said he had a "high opinion of Clark."

The President defended the nomination at an Oct. 25 press conference. He said an envoy to the Vatican could serve the cause of world peace. He said the question of separation of church and state did not enter into the nomination.

Scores of Protestant church groups protested the nomination. The General Board of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. asked Mr. Truman to withdraw the nomination, calling it "an alarming threat to basic American principles."

The nomination, unless withdrawn, shaped up as one of the sharpest controversies of the 1952 session.

LaFollette, Richardson

The Senate did not take action on the nominations of two chairmen of the Subversive Activities Control Board. They were Seth Richardson, its first chairman, and Charles M. LaFollette, his successor.

The appointments were made Feb. 12. Richardson resigned as of June 30 for reasons of ill health. He had said previously, when the Senate delayed confirmation, that he did not want to become the center of a "knock down and drag out" Senate fight.

LaFollette served until the adjournment of Congress. The Judiciary Committee had taken no formal action on his nomination, although a two-man subcommittee had talked with LaFollette and other Board members informally.

The other three Board members were approved by the Committee July 30 without a hearing and were confirmed by the Senate Aug. 9. Sen. Arthur V. Watkins (R Utah), Committee member, said Oct. 22 that LaFollette was overlooked because of "incompatibility" with other Board members. LaFollette said he wouldn't ask for a recess appointment.

Frieda Hennock

The Senate did not confirm the nomination of Miss Frieda Hennock, a member of the Federal Communications Commission, to be a federal judge for the Southern District of New York.

Miss Hennock was nominated June 11. The Senate Judiciary Committee held closed hearings Sept. 27, Oct. 13 and 15. The nomination was opposed by the American Bar Association and the New York State, County and City Bar Associations.

The nomination was supported by the Federal Bar Association of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, the New York City Planning Commission, and Attorney General J. Howard McGrath.

The Committee took no action before the adjournment of Congress. The President said he would not withdraw the nomination, but he did not give her a recess appointment. She continued in her FCC post.

Youngdahl Judgeship

Gov. Luther W. Youngdahl, three times elected governor of Minnesota and considered to be the best Republican vote-getter in the Gopher State, stirred up a political controversy by accepting nomination to be judge in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia.

Youngdahl's nomination and acceptance came as a complete surprise to the Minnesota Republican organization, but Minnesota's Democratic Senator Hubert H. Humphrey said he had talked the appointment over with the President.

Despite criticism from GOP State Committee officials, Youngdahl accepted the nomination because he did not want to be "pressed to run for a fourth term" and wanted to return to his "first love", the bench.

Youngdahl appeared before the Senate Judiciary Committee Aug. 21 in closed session. The Committee approved Youngdahl Aug. 27 and the Senate confirmed the nomination Aug. 28 on voice vote.

Waring for TVA

The nomination of Frank A. Waring, former Chairman of the Philippine War Damage Commission, to the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority was withdrawn.

The nomination was made Aug. 22. Sen. Kenneth McKellar (D Tenn.) objected and said he would fight confirmation. The nomination was withdrawn Oct. 1. The President said the State Department had "urgently requested" Waring's services as economic affairs counselor at the U.S. Embassy at Tokyo.

RFC Directors

The President nominated five persons Feb. 12 to be members of the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Senate took no action on the nominations.

On April 13, the President's RFC reorganization plan received final Congressional approval. Under that plan, the Board of Directors was abolished in favor of a single administrator. W. Stuart Symington was nominated to that post April 23, was approved by the Banking Committee April 26 and by the Senate on voice vote April 30.

Telford Taylor

The nomination of Telford Taylor, former Army officer and chief prosecutor at the Nuremberg war crimes trials, to be Small Defense Plants Administrator was confirmed Oct. 15 on a roll-call vote, 41-20. (For voting, see page 532.)

In Senate debate, Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.) said Taylor had had no business experience. John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) said the President "has done the best he can" in picking Taylor.

MILITARY PROMOTIONS

All new commissions and permanent promotions in the Armed Forces must be approved by the Senate. The President sent 23,437 such nominations to the Senate in 1951. None was rejected; none was withdrawn.

But 16 of them were not confirmed. They were promotions for 16 high-ranking generals who were caught in a wave of military thrift in the Armed Services Committee. Committee members declared there were too many high-ranking officers in the Army, Air Force and Marine Corps and clamped a lid on further promotions.

A Committee spokesman said it was nothing personal against the 16 generals and intimated that confirmation would come in 1952. In the meantime, most of the generals already had temporary appointments to the higher ranks.

LOBBY ROUNDUP

Lobby Spending

CONGRESSIONAL QUARTERLY LOBBY REGISTRATIONS

SUMMARY

Almost every piece of legislation Congress considered, and some Congress hadn't time to consider, attracted its lobbyists, seeking to make their influence felt. Lobby groups in 1951 were seeking many of the same things they sought in previous years, but tailored their long-standing legislative programs to the national emergency.

The major concerns of the groups included taxation, appropriations and controls. The organizations made their influence felt in various ways and in some cases, bills or amendments under debate were drafted originally by private groups or individuals.

From the individuals' standpoint, lobbying paid off. While many registered lobbyists received no pay for their efforts, others made more than $50,000 a year. However, accurate comparisons were difficult to make because some registrants did not report just how much they were paid for lobbying.

At the close of 1951, a total of about 2,500 registrations of individuals, law or public relations firms, or organizations, had been filed with the House and Senate. That total included all filings under the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act -- Title III of the Legislative Reorganization Act -- which went into effect in August, 1946.

The law requires registration before an individual starts to lobby for pay. It does not require re-registration each year. Some agents registered more than once, some registered for more than one client at a time; and some clients had more than one registered representative. Some registrants withdrew, either with or without so reporting.

EX-CONGRESSMEN REGISTER

Among prominent individuals registering under the lobby law in 1951 were ex-Congressmen, who enjoy the privilege of the floor in the chambers where they formerly served.

The law firm of former Sen. Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.), Senate majority leader in 1949 and 1950, registered as working in behalf of five organizations, each of which was to pay a fee of $5,000 a year.

The law firm represented the Acacia Mutual Life Insurance Company in its efforts to have all life insurance firms taxed on their actual individual earnings instead of earnings arrived at by use of industry averages for reserve requirements, and to have life insurance stock companies taxed on net earnings whether from investment or insurance premiums, instead of only from investments. Using figures submitted by Acacia, this could have meant additional hundreds of millions of dollars collected by the U.S. Treasury in taxes from 1940 to 1949.

Lucas' firm also registered for an organization interested in the relaxation of credit controls on consumer sales of radio and TV, and for three other sets of clients interested in credit controls, taxes or both.

Ex-Rep. Fred A. Hartley, Jr. (R N.J.), co-sponsor of the Taft-Hartley Act while he was chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee of the 80th Congress, registered as working for the Western Medical Corporation in opposition to drug sales legislation. He registered Sept. 28 and was to receive a fee of $5,000; legislative interest was to last through December, 1951.

Ex-Sen. Sheridan Downey (D Calif.), who fought the Administration on "tidelands" oil until his retirement in 1950, registered for the same fight on behalf of the Long Beach, Calif., Board of Harbor Commissioners. He was to be paid $3,000 a month, and expected to devote half of that to salaries and office expenses.

Former Rep. C. Jasper Bell (D Mo.) (1935-49) registered on behalf of the Philippine-American Committee at an annual salary of $25,000, plus expenses. Bell also was one of a group of lawyers registered on a contingency-fee basis to recover funds involved in a steamship transaction with the U.S. government. The lawyers were to get up to 40 per cent of recoveries after expenses on a claim estimated at $4.5 million.

Bell also registered for the National Institute of Oilseed Products on a $6,000-a-month short-time basis. This employment concerned amendments to the coconut-oil tax aspects of the customs simplification bill.

Former Senate Majority Whip Francis J. Myers (D Pa.) (1945-1951) registered on behalf of the National Foundation for Consumer Credit, Inc., a group opposed to consumer credit control Regulation W. Myers' fee was $3,750 a year.

Ex-Rep. George E. MacKinnon (R Minn.) (1947-1949) reported that he was to receive personal travel expenses while representing the Farmers and Mechanics Savings Bank of Minneapolis, which was opposed to elimination of the federal income tax exemption given mutual savings banks.

Ex-Rep. Albert L. Reeves, Jr. (R Mo.) (1947-1949) signed two registrations of his law firm, working for amendments to the Internal Revenue Code on estate and gift tax laws to permit certain benefits to go also to estates of incompetents. Reeves reported that $3,500 of one of the retainers for this work and $5,000 of another might be allocable to legislative interests.

Reeves had registered between May, 1949, and the end of 1951 on behalf of ship lines, freight forwarders, a grain exchange, a mail-order house and an electric firm, as well as for estates.

Among senior partners of his law firm were Homer S. Cummings, Attorney General from 1933 until 1939, and Max O'Rell Truitt, son-in-law of Vice President Alben Barkley. Truitt is a former U.S. Maritime Commissioner.

FORMER GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS

Former government officials also were among registrants. The law firm of former Secretary of the Navy John L. Sullivan and former Navy Under Secretary W. John Kenney registered as representatives of a group of finance companies interested in a taxing practice under which a corporation could split into several corporations, gaining greater exemption credits. The firm did not oppose closing the loophole for those corporations which split for tax-avoidance purposes, they said, but did not want this to affect firms which were split for other reasons.

Robert N. Denham, former National Labor Relations Board General Counsel, registered under the lobbying act as representing the Continental Baking Company, with plants located in cities all over the U.S.

Denham indicated he would be interested in legislation on labor relations.

The law firm of Ganson Purcell, Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission from 1942 until 1946, represented a Philadelphia lumber firm which had taken a stand on tax problems in 1950. The firm did business in the Philippine Republic and supported an Administration proposal to give the same tax privilege to firms doing foreign business through foreign branches as to firms with foreign subsidiaries, postponing tax on corporation income earned abroad until it was brought back to the U.S.

Following is a roundup of the registrations CQ obtained between Dec. 31, 1950, and Dec. 31, 1951, from the House Clerk and the Senate Secretary.

These totaled 345 and were made by 268 clients or their agents. They are listed below, by categories, under the name of the organization or client represented. The name of the firm or individual who filed the registration is given (with the name of the signer indicated when the filing was by an organization.)

For registrations of previous years, see CQ Almanac, Vol. III, 1947, pp. 759-774, Vol. IV, 1948, pp. 425-439; Vol. V, 1949, pp. 842-865; and Vol. VI, 1950, pp. 771-799.

Filed Feb. 21.

AIR TRANSPORT ASSN. OF AMERICA, Washington (trade association for the scheduled airlines) --

FORD MOTOR CO., Dearborn, Mich. --
Gerald J. Lynch, director, Ford's Washington office for defense mobilization, Washington -- $1,666.66 salary monthly plus possible supplemental compensation, plus travel expenses. MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS' ASSN., INC., Washington --

One registration was filed in MCA's own name; it was signed Dec. 11 by M. F. Crass, Jr., secretary. The same day another registration in his own name was signed by:

M(aurice) F. Crass, Jr., secretary -- Crass' annual salary of $15,000 is for all duties; an estimated less than five per cent of his time is spent on legislative interests, principally the reporting on status of bills of interest to the membership, he said. His expenses consist largely of travel, per diem, etc. Reportable allocations from his salary and expenses are variable and indeterminate. MCA anticipated expenses are also indeterminate; probably will consist of part of public relations fees, travel, per diem, meals, etc.

Bills to regulate use of chemicals in foods were main interest at time of filing, but MCA is generally interested in any legislation affecting the chemical industry. Principal legislative efforts are to keep members informed of pending bills and to arrange occasional appearances by MCA spokesmen before Congressional committees.

MCA doubted that such activities, a minor part of its staff's duties, would require that registration be made under the lobbying law, but said it filed partly to show good faith and partly because it had recently started a "public relations and educational program designed to promote chemicals in general and also to overcome certain misconceptions by the public as to the record of the chemical industry in connection with current discussion of 'Chemicals in Foods'."

Crass told CQ that MCA backs customs simplification bill (HR 5505) as it was passed by the House, supported the protective devices written into the 1951 trade agreements extension bill; opposed revision of the Capehart amendment to the controls bill.

LOBBY WITHDRAWALS

There is no machinery explicitly provided in the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act for the withdrawal by a lobbyist or organization from the registration lists, nor is there any official file of such withdrawals. Consequently, many of those who registered at one time may have dropped out of activity without notice. Also, those who gave notice of withdrawal did so in various ways, and their terminations were filed in various places.

Due to this and indefinite wording regarding termination of activity in many reports, the following list does not include all withdrawals.

Congressional Quarterly gathered the withdrawals from various files. Mainly the list is based on statements filed before the House Clerk's cutoff date for inclusion in the Nov. 14 "Congressional Record." Quarterly reports, which may have carried some withdrawal notices, filed after that date generally were not available in time for Almanac publication.

Among withdrawals not included in this list are those of registrants who said their interests would last for a stated length of time, but gave no further explanation. CQ would not count them as withdrawals until additional, final reports would be filed.

LAW REQUESTS NOTICES

While there is no formal machinery for withdrawal provided for in the law, the form does ask those filing it to "please explain, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports" if legislative interests have terminated with the current quarter.

It was not always clear, however, that an individual meant to withdraw when he indicated that the specific bill or bills in which he was interested had ceased to be legislative issues. In some cases, such persons may have wished to stay registered because they foresaw the possibility of new, legislative interests. An answer which merely listed a past date of termination of interest, and which was listed by CQ as a withdrawal, may not, therefore, be one. Other persons filing what may actually have been their last reports did not so indicate and were not listed here.

Dates given below are for the effective termination of lobbying activity in most cases, and for the report of termination, in some cases. Report of termination, usually, is within three months of termination, but in some cases it is considerably later.

Withdrawal and termination dates given are in 1951, unless otherwise stated.

Dates of original registration, based mainly on the Justice Department-compiled indexes published by the House Select Committee on Lobbying Activities, likewise are for 1951 unless stated. In some cases, withdrawals were made by persons or groups who did not register but did file financial reports previous to or simultaneous with the termination-of-interest notice.

(See also, 1948 Almanac, pp. 437-9; 1949 Almanac, pp. 864-5; 1950 Almanac, pp. 791-9 for previous roundups.)

AMA, CCG, Townsend Plan Groups Reported Largest Outlays

Organizations attempting to influence national legislation spent a record $10,303,204 during 1950, according to a Congressional Quarterly tabulation of their reports made under the federal Regulation of Lobbying Act.

This included reports filed by or for 340 associations, companies, labor unions, and other organizations. A number of them said they believed they were not covered by the lobby law, but made reports anyway.

Of the total, $8,374,143 was spent in connection with legislative interests, according to reports of 304 groups. Eight groups, reporting expenditures totaling $1,929,099, did not specify what portion of their spending was for lobbying and what portion was for other activities. Eight organizations filed reports without expenditures statements, and 20 groups reported, but said they spent nothing for lobbying.

Top spender reporting during 1950 was the American Medical Association, which paid out $1,326,078, according to its lobbying law statements.

However, the AMA's publicity arm -- the National Education Campaign -- said, in a separate report, it received $2.5 million from the AMA. Of this, NEC said, $880,915 "fairly" could be considered as spent for lobbying.

AMA also was top spender in 1949 when it reported expenditures totaling $1,522,683, half of which, AMA said, was for lobbying.

The Committee for Constitutional Government, which tangled with a House committee during a controversial lobby investigation in 1950, reported spending $921,549 "in connection with legislative interests." In 1949, CCG spent $620,632, according to its lobby law report. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 768.)

16 TOP SPENDERS

Some 16 groups reported spending more than $100,000. In some cases, instead of specifying what had been spent just for lobbying, the organization reported its total spending for all purposes, sometimes adding that it was not possible to allocate a specific sum for lobbying. The top spending groups and the amounts they reported in 1950 were:

American Medical Association (allocation for lobbying)	$1,326,078
Committee for Constitutional Government (total)	921,549
Townsend Plan, Inc., and Townsend National Weekly, Inc. (total through third quarter)	379,551
United World Federalists (total; UWF said less than 15 per cent went for legislation)	345,022
National Small Business Men's Association (total)	221,107
National Assn. of Real Estate Boards (allocation)	133,650
The American Legion (allocation)	130,872
National Tax Equality Association (22.1 per cent allocation)	126,971
National Coal Association (allocation)	122,737
Atlantic Union Committee (total)	116,666
American Federation of Labor (allocation)	116,027
National Federation of Post Office Clerks (allocation)	115,092
Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. (allocation)	109,926
Southern States Industrial Council (total)	104,387

REPORTS VARY

The figures included in the CQ tabulation were based chiefly on the reports by organizations, rather than individual lobbyists. In a few cases, however, CQ listed organizations which did not file reports in their own names; in these cases individuals representing the organizations filed reports which seemed to account for the organization's activity.

Agents were not required to, and in most cases, apparently did not, report all the lobby spendings of their organizations.

Organizations used various methods of accounting for their lobbying expenditures, and so the figures reported under the lobby act were comparable only to a limited extent.

Reasons for the variations were these: There was disagreement about the requirements of the Federal Reuglation of Lobbying Act, on what the official report form called for, and over the definition of lobbying; and there was a great variety in the makeup and financial practices of the organizations filing reports.

Most groups reported the part of their spending which they considered was directly connected with legislation. This figure either was specifically labeled as a legislative allocation or it appeared on the official report form under the heading "expenditures in connection with legislative interests."

Some groups reported all spending under that heading, although they spent money for other purposes. The amount of the other spending, not always was indicated on the reports, however.

On the other hand, other groups reporting their total expenditures as going for lobbying considered that they actually did spend it all "in connection with legislative interests". An example was the Townsend Plan organization, whose central objective was the enactment of legislation setting up its program.

2,000 LOBBYISTS

Various estimates have put the number of associations and other organizations doing some lobbying in the thousands.

From the time the lobby law went into effect Aug. 2, 1946, through the third quarter of 1950, reports were filed by or for an estimated 1,600 organizations. Only about 430 of these groups reported in their own names. The others came into the picture because their agents reported as individuals.

By the end of 1950, about 2,000 agents of these organizations had reported under the law requiring lobby registrations.

On the basis of reports filed, more than 900 agents were active during the first nine months of 1950. An agent often is a law or public relations firm or a group of individuals.

SPENDING INCREASED STEADILY

Through 1950, reported lobby spending increased each year from the time the lobbying act took effect. Lobby spending totals prior to 1950, according to Congressional Quarterly tabulations, were: $7,969,710 in 1949; $6,191,838 during 1948; and $5,058,357 in 1947. Each total includes spending of a number of groups which reported for only part of the year.

These figures, especially for the earlier years, do not reflect adjustments, mostly upward, for late-filed reports.

Business groups led all others in total spending reported, though the four biggest spending organizations -- AMA, CCG, Townsend Plan, and World Federalists -- were not business groups.

CQ's classification of an organization is based on what appears to be the basic nature of the group's membership -- determined largely by the organization name rather than by legislative interest.

Following is a comparison of spending by different interest groups in 1949 and 1950. The makeup of two categories is not the same for both those years. For its 1949 roundup, CQ counted National Associated Businessmen and its 10 reporting affiliates among business groups. The 1950 roundup puts NAB and its affiliates -- a score of them made reports in 1950 -- among tax groups.

Category	Spent	No. of Groups	Spent	No. of Groups
Business	$3,410,054	141	$3,280,278	140
Citizens	1,799,803	45	1,015,073	30
Employee	518,413	30	257,301	17
Farm	1,212,214	13	391,595	11
Foreign Policy	744,904	13	718,556	14
Professional	1,596,835	21	1,672,043	15
Reclamation	389,374	11	374,174	11
Tax	443,186	31	154,967	13
Veterans, Military	188,421	7	105,723	5
TOTAL	10,303,204	312	7,969,710	256

In the reports, groups gave their legislative interests, literature issued, income, and spending. Expenditures covered public relations and advertising, salaries, contributions, printing and distribution of literature, office overhead, telephone and telegraph, and travel, food, lodging, and entertainment.

Legislative interests ran the gamut of the measures before Congress during 1950.

Lobby Spending -- First Half, 1951

Financial reports filed in compliance with the federal lobbying law, covering activities during the first six months of 1951, disclosed a $4,578,014 spending total as reported by 240 groups. American Farm Bureau Federation led the pack as top spending reporter, but its $415,812 figure included all expenditures, not just those for legislative work.

(Only figures for the first half of 1951 can be given here. Amounts reported spent during the whole year will be available in the 1952 CQ Almanac.)

Two hundred and sixty-six organizations -- firms, labor unions and associations -- submitted reports on their attempts directly or indirectly to sway federal legislation. Twenty-six groups reported they spent nothing for legislative purposes or did not state their expenditures.

21 TOP SPENDERS

Business groups as a whole led all other categories in reported spending with a total of $1,538,226.91 by 101 groups.

There were 21 groups that reported spending more than $50,000 during the first six months of 1951. The declared expenditures of some groups represented total outlay. Others reported only a portion of their total expenditures--that amount allocated toward legislative activities, or that which they believed to be reportable under the lobbying law. The top spenders were:

WHAT WENT BEFORE -- KEY VOTES 1945-1951

SUMMARY

Here is the voting background on which Congress etched its 1951 record. This picture of what went before is made up of 120 roll-call votes -- 10 apiece for the House and Senate for each year from 1945 through 1950.

Included here, for easier comparison, are the key votes for 1951. (These also appear, with detailed background and analysis, on pages 62-65 of this volume.)

Thus the key votes for seven years, 1945-51, are charted in the following 21 pages. From them the voting record of any Member of Congress on the important issues of that period can be checked more easily and quickly than by any other method.

CQ selected the key roll calls as the most significant of the hundreds taken each year. Not all of the votes CQ chose were the final ballots which assured passage or defeat of legislation. Many applied to crucial amendments or parliamentary moves to push or squelch legislative proposals.

The mid-battle ballot often was a better indication of a measure's true backing than the final vote, which sometimes was heavy with the "bandwagon" of opponents who saw that their earlier moves had failed.

Citations to fuller descriptions of the key votes in the years 1945-1950 appear in the vote captions. The page references are to CQ Almanac Vols. I-VI (1945-1950).

In its first key roll call of 1945, the Senate voted to extend the Commodity Credit Corporation's life and increase its lending power. In later roll calls, Senators decided to continue the trade agreements program, passed the Employment Act of 1946, and rejected an amendment making a corporation tax cut retroactive.

Among key 1945 House roll-call votes were ones extending the reciprocal trade program, passing the employment act, and approving an immediate corporation tax cut. On other ballots, the House made permanent the Un-American Activities Committee and agreed to ban the poll tax as a voting qualification.

In the Senate, the House-passed poll tax bill failed to get action when a motion to close debate was rejected on a roll-call vote. Other Senate record votes in 1946 authorized the $3.75 billion loan to Britain and rejected a move to grant equal rights to women.

The House on roll call approved the British loan, agreed to the conference report on extending the draft, rejected a motion to kill the Atomic Energy Act, and sustained the President's veto of price control extension.

With the interim foreign aid bill before it, Senators on a key ballot knocked down an amendment to cut aid from $597 million to $400 million. Other roll-call votes approved $400 million for aid to Greece and Turkey, passed the Taft-Hartley Act, and sustained the President's veto of income tax cuts.

The House approved Greek-Turkish and interim foreign aid, passed the Taft-Hartley Act over the President's veto and sustained the veto on income tax cuts.

A reduction of income tax was again before the Congress in 1948, and again was vetoed. This time both chambers, on roll-call votes, overrode the President's objection.

In other record votes, the Senate and House approved a five-year extension of the draft, approved admission of 202,000 displaced persons, and authorized the "Marshall Plan."

1949

Early in the year, a Senate roll-call vote rebuffed Administration efforts to make it easier to limit debate. Other roll calls rejected an amendment to cut Marshall Plan aid, approved a low-cost housing program and federal aid to education, rejected an amendment to retain "peril points" in the reciprocal trade program, and approved the $1.3 billion foreign military aid program.

The House killed a veterans pension plan, approved low-rent public housing and existing non-flexible farm price supports, passed a 75-cent minimum hourly wage bill, and agreed to a cut in military aid abroad.

Outstanding Senate votes were to increase the borrowing authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation by $2 billion, cut 10 per cent from funds earmarked for non-defense spending, knock out provisions for co-op housing and to authorize a "Point Four" program.

Among key House votes were those to reject a $60 million Korean aid program, to defeat attempts to kill Point Four aid, and prevent a halt in debate on the taxation of excess profits.

The Senate voted to advise the President to ask Congress before sending more soldiers to Europe, overrode the veto on increased pensions for some disabled veterans, rejected a move to strike out UMT provisions, and agreed to a ban on livestock slaughtering quotas.

House roll calls inserted a "peril point" provision in the reciprocal trade program, overrode the pension bill veto, rejected a motion to kill UMT, and agreed to ban slaughtering quotas and beef-price rollbacks.

BACKGROUND FOR 1952 ELECTIONS

CAMPAIGN FOR THE HOUSE -- 1952

179 Districts in 36 States Held Key to Control

At the close of 1951, the key to the control of the House of Representatives in the 83rd Congress was held by a total of 179 districts in 36 states, according to Congressional Quarterly's analysis of doubtful and marginal districts. The CQ study was based entirely on the percentage of victory for House seats in the 1944, 1946, 1948 and 1950 general elections and the special elections in 1951.

The 179 key seats were won in 1950 by election margins below 60 per cent. They were being eyed by both parties, each hoping to capture as many seats of the opposite party as possible while keeping its own doubtful seats.

KEY DISTRICT BREAKDOWN

A recapitulation of the relative strength of the Democrats and Republicans in the last four Congresses and the key districts determining the political complexion of each Congress showed:

	Members			Key Districts			Key States
	D	R	Other	D	R	Other
79th	242	191	2	104	65	-	31
80th	188	246	1	38	103	1	27
81st	263	171	1	99	108	1	37
82nd	233	201	1	73	105	1	36

The 1950 election resulted in this House membership:

Democrats	234
Republicans	200
Independent	1
	435
Needed for majority	218

There were several changes in House Membership during 1951 as result of deaths and resignations. When the second session began, there were 231 Democrats, 201 Republicans, one independent, and two vacancies. At that time, a net loss of 15 seats would have cost the Democrats numerical control--and a net gain of 16 for the Republicans would have given them more seats than the Democrats held.

Two new factors entered into the 1952 election. One was that redistricting was under consideration in 20 states. The net result of redistricting in most states was to make the Democratic districts more Democratic and the Republican districts more Republican. Therefore, there probably would be fewer doubtful districts in these states in 1952 than there were in 1950.

The second factor was the Presidential campaign. According to political analysts, the party winning the Presidency usually nets about 25 more House seats than it would win in a non-Presidential election year. Presidential elections always increase interest and voting in Congressional races, reflected in higher Congressional percentages in Presidential election years.

The rockbottom strength of both political parties was in those districts which were won by 60 per cent or more of the vote. In 39 states, the Democrats have 160 such districts, the Republicans 96.

Districts which could be counted as marginal were those which, for either party, were won in 1950, by between 55 and 59 per cent of the total vote. The Democrats had 30 such districts, the Republicans, 50. These districts were scattered over 28 states.

The doubtful districts, won by less than 55 per cent of the vote, had the eye of both parties. There were 43 Democratic and 55 Republican and 1 Independent marginal districts in 30 states.

Thus there were 256 districts in which it was unlikely there would be any party change. There were 80 districts which probably would stay in the same party, but may switch to the other, particularly in a Presidential election year. And, finally, there were 99 districts which were won by such low percentages that it was very likely that many of them would switch to the opposite party in the 1952 election.

Political Switches

Party control had changed in 103 Congressional districts in 25 states in the previous four elections. Of the other 23 states, 12 had remained solidly Democratic; nine solidly Republican; Tennessee had maintained its ratio of eight Democrats and two Republicans and Texas had returned to the solid Democratic column after seven months in which it had a GOP Congressman in 1950.

Here are the 103 seats which changed hands politically once or more, from 1944 through 1951, by states. For detailed percentages, see chart, page 748.

Missouri -	8

*Illinois figures based only on 1950 and 1948 because of redistricting.

Party control switched once in each of 46 districts in 18 states. It switched twice in 50 districts in 18 states, and three times in seven districts in six states.

Connecticut, Idaho, Missouri, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin each had a seat in which party control switched three times. The third switch in the Missouri 11th district was the result of a special election in March, 1951. Ohio had two seats which switched three times. The third switch in the 3rd district was the result of a special election in November 1951.

35 Switches in 14 States

Thirty-five Congressional districts in 14 states switched parties as a result of the 1950 election and two special elections early in 1951. Of this total, 32 were captured by the GOP, two by Democrats, and one by an Independent.

The largest number of party switches occurred in states where there were Senate races. Ohio had six House switches. New York and Indiana each had five House seats switch, and Illinois four.

Of the 35 districts, 34 were won by less than 60 per cent of the vote, and 27 by less than 55. The only exception was the switch in Nebraska's second district, which the GOP won by 63.5 per cent. This race centered on the Fair Deal record of former Rep. Eugene D. O'Sullivan (D Neb.), particularly his support of the Administration's national health insurance program.

New York was the only state in which the Democrats picked up seats. Due to a GOP intra-party quarrel, the Democrats won the 1st district, previously solidly Republican. The Democratic candidate in the 18th, Rep. James G. Donovan, had Republican and Liberal party support to help him defeat Vito Marcantonio, the only ALP member of Congress. New York also had three switches to the Republicans in the 35th, 43rd and 44th districts. With the exception of the Donovan-Marcantonio contest, all of the New York races were extremely close in the switch districts. Donovan won by 57.8 per cent of the vote.

In all but one of the states where there were party switches in Congressional delegations there were also Senate races. Republicans won the Senate races in the switch states of California, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Maryland, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin. Democrats won the Senate races in the switch states of Connecticut, Missouri, New York and Oklahoma. Nebraska was the only switch state that had no Senate race.

THE SWITCH STATES

The changes by states were as follows: (all to the GOP unless otherwise noted)

California (1), 9th.
Colorado (1), 3rd.
Connecticut (1), 2nd.
Idaho (1), 1st.
Illinois (4, all in Cook county), 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 11th.
Indiana (5), 3rd, 4th, 5th, 7th and 11th.
Maryland (1), 2nd.
Missouri (3), 6th, 11th and 12th. The 11th was won by a Republican in a special election in March, 1951, after a Democrat won by 64.5 per cent of the vote in November, 1950.
Nebraska (1), 2nd.
New York (5), 1st and 18th -- both won by the Democrats, and 35th, 43rd, and 44th.
Ohio (6), 2nd, 3rd, 9th, 14th, 16th, and at large. The 9th was won by an Independent.
Oklahoma (2), 1st and 8th.
Pennsylvania (3), 23rd, 26th and 29th.
Wisconsin (1), 5th.

The 1950 Battlegrounds

Three states -- Nevada, Utah and Wyoming -- elected their Representatives in 1950 with margins under 55 per cent.

Nine states -- Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Idaho, Indiana, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah and Wyoming -- elected their Congressmen with margins under 60 per cent.

All but two of these states are in the West or Midwest. Indiana had 11 Representatives, and every one was from a close district. None of these states would be redistricted, so they were likely to be battlegrounds in the future, as they were in the past.

There were six Philadelphia districts, and all were won by less than 60 per cent in 1950. The 3rd district was won by 50.3 per cent of the vote in 1950; the 6th by 50 per cent. Both were GOP districts. Pennsylvania was scheduled to be redistricted so some change in these districts were pending.

Close No-Switch Districts

In the 1950 election and special elections in 1951, 73 districts in 26 states were won by the incumbent party by percentages of 55 or less. Of this total, 43 were Democratic and 30 Republican. Although the opposing party did not win these districts from the incumbents, it cut the election percentage margin to a dangerous low.

The largest numbers of districts won by the incumbents on narrow votes were in Pennsylvania (8), New York (6), California (6), Missouri (5), and New Jersey (5).

There were five Democratic no-switch marginal districts in Pennsylvania, New York, and Missouri; four in West Virginia and three in New Jersey and California. Illinois, Indiana, Massachusetts, Ohio and Utah had two each.

California and Pennsylvania each had three no-switch marginal Republican districts, and Indiana, Kansas, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Jersey, Tennessee and Washington, two each.

There were more such doubtful Democratic districts in the states where there were Senate races, and more lowered-margin districts were retained by Republicans in the states which had no Senate contest.

Of the unchanged-but-closer districts held by the incumbents in the states where there were Senate races, 31 were Democratic; 18 were Republican. Where there were no Senate races, there were 12 marginal no-switch Republican districts and 12 Democratic.

HOW STATES WENT

State breakdown on the no-switch marginal districts:

ELECTION PERCENTAGES: 1944 - 50

This exclusive CQ chart shows the election pattern for House seats for the 79th, 80th, 81st, and 82nd Congresses. Districts consistently won by over 60 per cent of the total vote seldom change politically. Districts in the 55 to 60 per cent bracket are key districts, but most of them stay in the same party. Districts which normally elect Representatives by less than 55 per cent of the vote are usually doubtful and can go either way. Figures pertain to winning candidate in each election, not necessarily to present holder of seat.

States where Democrats won Senate races, total number of no-switch doubtful districts, 19; 14 Democratic, 5 Republican: Connecticut, 1 D, 2 R; Missouri, 5 D; Nevada, 1 D; New York, 5 D, 1 R; North Carolina, 1 D; Washington, 1 D, 2 R.

States with no Senate races, total number of doubtful no-switch districts, 24; 12 Democratic, 12 Republican: Maine, 1 R; Massachusetts, 2 D, 2 R; Michigan, 1 D, 2 R; Minnesota, 1 D; Montana, 1 R; Nebraska, 1 R; New Jersey, 3 D, 2 R; Tennessee, 2 R; Texas, 1 D; West Virginia, 4 D; Wyoming, 1 R.

Four of the five states with the largest number of no-switch marginal districts had been or would be redistricted: California, Missouri, New York and Pennsylvania. New Jersey would not be redistricted.

Other states with no-switch marginal districts due for redistricting, or already redistricted, were Illinois, Michigan, Ohio, Tennessee, and Washington.

The Democrats retained control in the 13th district in Texas by a very low percentage because of an eight-man race. Normally a safe Democratic district, it had been handled as such in all calculations.

One-Party States

Twenty-one states had one-party representation in Congressional elections from 1944 through 1950. Of this total, 12 were Democratic and 9 were Republican.

The 12 "solid" Democratic states were all in the South or Southwest with the exception of Rhode Island. They were Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, New Mexico, North Carolina, Rhode Island, South Carolina and Virginia.

Georgia was most solid of the "solid" Democratic states. There wasn't even any opposition to the Democratic nominees in the Empire State of the South during the period surveyed, 1944-1950. During the same period, all of the Democratic candidates were elected by 60 per cent or more of the vote in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, and South Carolina.

The term "Solid South" had real meaning in 1950 in six states -- Alabama, Georgia, Arkansas, Louisiana and Mississippi. Democratic nominees had no opposition whatsoever in the states of Arkansas, Georgia, Louisiana and South Carolina. There was opposition in only one Alabama House race in 1950, and the Democratic nominee, Rep. Kenneth A. Roberts (D Ala.) of the 4th district, won by 93.7 per cent of the vote.

Although there was opposition in all but one of the Mississippi House races, all Democratic nominees except Rep. William M. Colmer (D Miss.) won by more than 90 per cent of the vote cast. Colmer's election percentage was 87.9.

The nine "solid" Republican states were geographically spread across the nation, with four in the Midwest, three in New England, one in the mountain west and one on the Pacific coast. They are Iowa, Kansas, Maine, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Oregon, South Dakota, Vermont and Wyoming. The most Republican of this group are North Dakota and Vermont, which from 1944-1950 elected their Congressmen by more than 60 per cent of the vote.

FIGHT FOR SENATE CONTROL -- 1952

Presidential Race, Poll Percentages, "Switching" States Figured in Contest

As the two parties in 1952 vied for a Senate majority, they faced a historical factor that linked control of the upper chamber to that of the White House. In the last four elections, the party winning the Presidency also won the Senate.

At the beginning of the 82nd Congress in January, the Democrats held 49 of the 96 Senate seats. This was the rockbottom minimum for control of the upper house of Congress. The Republicans held 47.

In April, however, the Democrats were able to pick up one seat as a result of the death of the late Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg, Michigan Republican, and the appointment of a Democrat, Blair Moody, to fill the vacancy. The Democrats then held 50 of the 96 seats in the Senate -- only one more than the 49 needed for numerical control. The Republicans held 46.

PAST PRESIDENTIAL YEARS

After the 1936 Presidential campaign and general election, the Democrats held all except 21 seats in the Senate. Seventeen were held by Republicans and four by other parties. This top-heavy Democratic control of the upper house of Congress declined steadily in the next 14 years, but the Democrats lost control of the Senate only once -- in the 80th Congress (1947-48), following the non-Presidential election year of 1946.

In the 1948 Presidential year they were able to win back a net of nine seats and again held Senate control in 1949. They barely escaped losing control in 1951, following the 1950 mid-term campaign in which the Democrats lost a net of five seats to the Republicans.

The following chart indicates Senate line-ups for the 75th-82nd Congresses. Asterisks indicate the party control during this period.

Cong.	Years	D Seats	R Seats	Others
75	1937-39	*75	17	4
76	1939-41	*69	23	4
77	1941-43	*66	28	2
78	1943-45	*57	38	1
79	1945-47	*57	38	1
80	1947-49	45	*51	-
81	1949-51	*54	42	-
82	1951-53	*50	46	-

When the 82nd Congress convened Jan. 3, 1951, and until Moody was seated on the Democratic side of the aisle April 25, the Democrats held control by the slimmest possible margin -- 49 to 47.

Campaign For 83rd Congress

At the start of 1952 there were 34 Senate seats "on the block" in 33 states. The Democrats had an advantage in that only 14 of the seats which they control were involved, and seven of these were in such normally Democratic territory as Florida, Kentucky, Mississippi, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia. Only Kentucky, of this group, had had a GOP Senator in recent years.

But the terms of 20 Senate Republicans were expiring Jan. 3, 1953. Only six of these were from normally Republican territory, such as Maine, Nebraska, North Dakota, Vermont, and Wisconsin.

THE BATTLEGROUNDS

Major inter-party races were expected in: Arizona, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Indiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Utah, Washington, West Virginia and Wyoming -- 21 states, where 14 GOP and seven Democratic seats were at stake. Also a stiff fight was expected in Wisconsin, normally GOP.

The Republicans felt they could hold all of the seats they had and expected they had an excellent chance to pick up seats in Connecticut, Maryland and Michigan. They thought they had a good-to-fair chance of picking up seats in West Virginia and in Arizona, New Mexico and Wyoming, all three of which elected Republican governors in 1950.

The Democrats likewise said that they could hold their seats and believed they had a first-rate chance to pick up seats in Missouri, Montana and Washington. If the governors of Indiana, Massachusetts and Ohio became the Democratic candidates for the Senate, they believed that the party would have an excellent chance to pick up these seats also. Finally, Democrats believed they had good-to-fair chances to pick up seats in California, Delaware, Minnesota, Nevada, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Utah and Wisconsin. As Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.) had become a prime target of the Democrats, they were expected to put up a rugged battle in the Wisconsin race, although Wisconsin leaned Republican.

WINNING MARGINS SLIM

Most of the Senate seats which either party felt it might be able to snatch from the other had in common one important thing. This was that when the present Senators won them, each did so with less than 55 per cent of the votes cast in the contest. Arizona was the exception.

LEADERS UP FOR ELECTION

Of the 14 Democratic Senators up for election or re-election in 1952 seven were either organization leaders or committee chairmen.

They include Ernest W. McFarland (Ariz.), Senate Democratic leader and Chairman of the Democratic Policy Committee; Kenneth McKellar (Tenn.), Chairman of the Appropriations Committee, dean and president pro-tem of the Senate; Tom Connally (Tex.), Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee; Joseph C. O'Mahoney (Wyo.), Chairman of the Interior Committee and the Joint Committee on the Economic Report; Harry Flood Byrd (Va.), Chairman of the Joint Committee on Reduction of Non-essential Federal Expenditures; Dennis Chavez (N.M.), Chairman of the Public Works Committee; and Herbert R. O'Conor (Md.), Chairman of the Special Committee to Investigate Interstate Crime.

Of the 20 Republican Senators up for re-election, five were former committee chairmen or were ranking minority members of their committees. They include Hugh Butler (Neb.), former Chairman of the Interior Committee, and Chairman of the Senate Republican Committee on Committees; Owen Brewster (Maine), former Chairman of the Senate Republican Campaign Committee and former Chairman of the War Investigating Committee, now defunct (of which President Truman also was Chairman when he served in the Senate); William Langer (N.D.), former Chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee and its ranking GOP member; Joseph R. McCarthy (Wis.), ranking GOP member of the Executive Expenditures Committee, and Harry P. Cain (Wash.), ranking GOP member of Public Works.

HIGH PARTY SENIORITY

This list includes a number of Senators with high party seniority. McKellar outranked all other Senators in seniority, having served through three wars. His term of service began March 4, 1917. Connally stood fourth, Byrd sixth, O'Mahoney seventh and Chavez tenth among all Democratic Senators.

On the Republican side Brewster stood fourth, Langer fifth and Butler sixth in their party's seniority in the Senate.

A considerable number of the Senate membership up for re-election was drawn from committees handling money legislation, taxes, commerce, reclamation, river and harbor and other public works programs. Although Democrats held a majority on all of these committees, in most instances more Republicans than Democrats in these groups were up for re-election.

There were six members of Finance, Interior and Commerce up for re-election, and in each of these Committees, four of the six were Republicans, two were Democrats. On the Public Works Committee six members also were up for re-election -- three Democrats and three Republicans. On Appropriations, seven faced 1952 re-election tests -- four Democrats and three Republicans.

The other Senate groups which have two or more members up for election or re-election include:

Republican Policy Committee -- five of the 11 members. They include Owen Brewster (Maine), William F. Knowland (Calif.), Edward Martin (Pa.), H. Alexander Smith (N.J.), and Edward J. Thye (Minn.). As the name of this committee indicates, its purpose is to establish Republican policy on issues which come before the Senate.

Armed Services, Judiciary -- five each.

Banking and Currency, Expenditures, Foreign Relations, Post Office and Civil Service, Rules and Economic Report -- four each.

Labor, Small Business and Economy in Federal Expenditures -- three each.

"SWITCHING" STATES

Nine of the states in which Senatorial elections were slated for 1952 were then represented by one Democratic and one Republican Senator. Except in one case, in either 1948 or 1950 they chose Senators of the party opposite from that of their Senators who are up for election in 1952. The parties were fairly evenly matched in these states, and stiff 1952 races were expected.

Seven of these states had Republican incumbents running for election in 1952; two had Democratic incumbents seeking to retain their Senate seats in the '52 race.

The "Switching" states:

Senator Up for Election - 1952	Senator Not Up For Election - 1952
DELAWARE
MARYLAND

Irving M. Ives (R)	Herbert H. Lehman (D)

Harry P. Cain (R)	Warren G. Magnuson (D)

In Michigan, where a stiff fight was anticipated, Sen. Moody gained his seat through appointment by a Democratic governor. Until the death of Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg, Michigan had two Republican Senators.

Governors of Opposite Parties

In 11 of the states in which there were Senatorial elections in 1952, the governors were of the opposite party from the Senators up for election in 1952.

In eight of these states -- Connecticut, Delaware, Indiana, Massachusetts, Missouri, Montana, Ohio, and Wyoming -- the governors had been mentioned as possible candidates for the Senate. There was considerable speculation in Indiana not only that Gov. Henry F. Schricker (D) would be Democratic candidate for the Senate, but also that Sen. William E. Jenner (R) would be GOP candidate for governor.

In these 11 states, the governor's party had control of the state patronage. This would aid any candidate of the governor's party -- or the governor himself if he was a candidate for the Senate -- in a race for the Senate against an incumbent of the opposite party.

Five of these states had Republican governors and incumbent Democratic Senators up for election in 1952; six have Democratic governors and incumbent Republican Senators whose terms expired in 1952

SENATE ELECTION LINEUP -- 1952

This chart shows basic data on Senate seats figuring in the 1952 election. The rank of the incumbent in party seniority in the Senate, the percentage by which the seat last was won and the incumbents' Party Unity are listed. All but six were elected in 1946. Blair Moody (D Mich.), Thomas R. Underwood (D Ky.) and Fred Seaton (R Neb.) were appointed to the Senate in 1951. William Benton (D Conn.) and John O. Pastore (D R.I.) were elected in November, 1950, and Sen. John C. Stennis (D Miss.) was elected in November, 1947, to fill vacancies.

CQ Party Unity Percentages are given for incumbents in the 79th, 80th, 81st and 82nd Congress, 1st Session. They represent the percentage of times that a Senator voted with his own party on controversial issues where the majority of Democrats lined up on one side and the majority of Republicans on the other.

ELECTION PERCENTAGES: 1944 - 50

This exclusive CQ chart shows the election pattern for Senate seats for the 79th, 80th, 81st, and 82nd Congresses. States consistently won by over 60 per cent of the total vote seldom change politically. States in the 55 to 60 per cent bracket are key states, but most of them stay in the same party. States which normally elect Senators by less than 55 per cent of the vote are usually doubtful and can go either way. Figures pertain to winning candidate in each election, not necessarily to present holder of seat.

PLATFORMS vs. PERFORMANCE

Democrats, Republicans Backed Up Most Campaign Promises, CQ Survey Shows

Both Democrats and Republicans in Congress made good, to some extent, on most planks in their parties' 1948 national platforms.

A point-by-point comparison by Congressional Quarterly of platforms, with subsequent performances disclosed that, after three years, both parties had made attempts to enact laws to carry out most of their promises. Some of these tries failed; others still were hanging fire when the first session of the 82nd Congress adjourned. And the time for preparing new platforms, for the 1952 campaign, was near.

STATEMENTS OF PRINCIPLE

Party platforms are agreed to every four years when each major political party convenes to pick its Presidential ticket. The platform is a long statement of principles plus a program of action for the next four years.

The last Democratic and Republican platforms were drawn up in the 1948 conventions.

At close of the 1951 session, both parties had had three years to make good on legislative promises. But, as the party in power, the Democrats probably enjoyed the most opportunities to deliver on their platform. However, CQ found that votes on the issues raised in Congress by the Democrats, as well as Republican proposals, provided a basis for judging the performance of the Republican party and its individual members in Congress.

PLANKS OFTEN SIMILAR

Platforms of the two parties frequently were similar. The Democratic platform more often endorsed an existing program, CQ found, while the GOP dealt in broader terms of overall policy. For instance, the Democrats pledged continuation of the Marshall Plan, while the GOP platform endorsed the principle of foreign aid.

As the Democrats held the power, their particular program usually was the one to be voted on. In order to carry through on stated principles, Republicans had to vote for or against the Democratic plan. In some instances -- reciprocal trade agreements were an example -- Republicans were able to gather enough Democratic support to put their program over in opposition to a majority of Democrats.

The platforms were vague on many points, endorsing "farm prosperity", for instance, or "the promotion of education and educational facilities." But for almost every platform plank, a piece of legislation could be found.

The CQ survey showed the two parties backed up their promises best in the categories of agriculture, defense and veterans legislation. The poorest performances were in civil rights.

To a greater or lesser degree, Congressional candidates endorsed and ran on their party's platform. Promises of party performance were based on the platforms.

Highlights

The platforms were long and complex, but some of the points became popular political issues. Some of these were:

Taft-Hartley repeal -- The Republicans kept their promise and blocked the Democratic attempt at repeal.

Farm price support -- Both parties agreed on flexible farm price supports and backed suitable legislation.

Oleo tax repeal -- Republicans didn't mention the issue in their platform, but they joined with Democrats to repeal the tax.

Civil rights -- Both parties promised civil rights legislation, but neither could deliver.

Communism -- Both parties promised to fight Communism in America. They passed a Subversive Activities Control Board law over the President's veto.

Public Housing -- The Democratic platform endorsed public housing, the Republican platform opposed it. A limited program was approved by Congress.

Reciprocal trade -- During the three years, Republicans first lost, then won in an annual fight to back up their campaign promise to keep "peril point" protection in the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act.

Inflation -- Democrats promised flatly to curb inflation; Republicans pledged to fight it. They quarrelled over details, and prices soared.

VOTED TOGETHER

Minimum wage -- Democrats pledged a 75-cent minimum wage law; the Republicans promised "decent wages" Both parties voted for the full increase.

Tidelands -- Democrats made no definite promises on disposition of oil-rich "tidelands". Republicans promised them to the adjacent states. No bill was passed. Both parties in the House backed a 1951 states-rights bill.

National defense -- Both parties pledged an adequate national defense, and both agreed on virtually every Congressional vote on armaments.

Economy -- Republicans promised government economy. The Democratic platform didn't mention it. They joined in support of most of the President's government reorganization plans.

Social Security -- Extension of the Social Security program was promised by both parties. A law raising benefits and extending coverage was passed with bipartisan support.

Displaced persons -- Democrats promised a broader DP law; the Republican platform endorsed the 1948 GOP bill. The parties joined in liberalizing the law.

Draft, UMT -- Neither platform specifically mentioned the draft or universal military training. But after the outbreak of war in Korea, both voted for them.

COMPARISON

Agriculture

PRICE SUPPORTS

Democrats: "We pledge our efforts to maintain continued farm prosperity, improvement of the standards of living and the working conditions of the farmer, and to preserve the family-size farm. Specifically, we favor a permanent system of flexible price supports for agricultural products, to maintain farm income on a parity with farm operating costs..."

Republicans: "...effective protection of reasonable market prices through flexible support prices, commodity loans, marketing agreements, together with such other means as may be necessary..."

PERFORMANCE

1949: A flexible price support system (the Hope-Aiken bill) had been approved by the 80th Congress and was scheduled to go into effect Jan. 1, 1950. However, both parties had expressed dissatisfaction with the measure, and in 1949 the 81st Congress passed a new flexible support law, making the effective date Jan. 1, 1951. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V., p. 131; House votes, p. 178; Senate votes, pp. 177, 180.)

In the House both parties supported the measure on final passage, with a vote of 384-25 on July 21, 1949. Democrats voted 233-11 and Republicans 150-14. Before final passage the House rejected a trial-run for the Brannan plan by voting, 239-170, to substitute the Gore bill for the Pace bill which contained some Brannan plan features. Democrats voted 79-165. Republicans 160-4.

The Senate also adopted the bill by a bipartisan vote, 46-7, Oct. 19 (D 27-0, R 19-7). However, several test votes on rigid versus flexible price supports occurred before final passage, with the majority of the Democrats favoring rigid supports, and the majority of the Republicans favoring flexible supports. An amendment to retain rigid supports for commodities under acreage and marketing controls was rejected Oct. 4, 37-38 (D 27-17, R 10-21). On reconsideration, the vote was tied, 37-37 (D 27-17, R 10-20), and the issue was decided by a "yea" vote of the Vice President. The Senate then voted, 41-29 (D 15-24, R 26-5) to send the bill back to committee with instructions to incorporate flexible supports. When it was again reported the attempt to reinstate the rigid-support amendment failed, this time by a bipartisan vote, 26-45 (D 18-23, R 8-22).

As a necessary accompaniment to the price-support and commodity-loan programs, the 81st Congress approved an expansion of Commodity Credit Corporation crop storage facilities. Lack of such facilities had hampered the operation of these programs, and the fact that the GOP 80th Congress had curtailed construction of storage facilities became a lively campaign issue in 1948. (Vol. V, p. 150; House votes, p. 178; Senate votes, p. 177.)

The House passed the crop storage expansion bill by a strong bipartisan majority, 325-53 (D 223-4, R 101-49). The Senate rejected the conference report on the measure, 33-47 (D 29-16, R 4-31). Principle objection was to a provision for the Secretary of Agriculture to appoint the directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation--thus by-passing Senate confirmation. When this provision was changed to provide for appointment by the President with Senate confirmation, the Senate accepted the bill by voice vote.

1950: Congress amended the price-support law in 1950 to adjust cotton, peanut and wheat acreage allotments, and to ban price supports for potatoes unless strict marketing quotas were in effect. An attempt in the Senate to put flexible price supports into effect before Jan. 1, 1951, was rejected. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 76; House votes, p. 100; Senate votes, pp. 98, 99.)

The Senate adopted the ban on price supports for potatoes by a bipartisan vote, 64-14 (D 44-2, R 20-12). But Democrats refused to go along with the proposal for an immediate sliding-scale system of price supports. The amendment was rejected, 17-59 (D 5-40, R 12-19).

A $2 billion increase in borrowing authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation to carry out the price support program was voted in 1950. (Vol. V, p. 72; House vote, p. 100; Senate votes, p. 102).

The House adopted the conference report on the bill, 235-81 (D 175-7, R 59-74).

The Senate passed the bill by a bipartisan vote, 46-5, (D 25-1, R 21-4). However, a Senate amendment restricting imports of agricultural commodities was modified in conference so that the conference report went through on a tie vote, with a "yea" vote of the Vice President deciding the issue (D 35-3, R 0-32).

1951: Congress passed legislation permitting the Secretary of Agriculture to increase acreage allotments and marketing quotas for peanuts and tobacco when those commodities are in short supply, but made no other significant changes in agricultural controls.

SOIL CONSERVATION

Democrats: "...an intensified soil conservation program..."

Republicans: "There must be a long-term program in the interest of agriculture and the consumer which should include an accelerated program of sounder soil conservation..."

PERFORMANCE

1949: Congress raised from $750 to $2,500 the limit on soil conservation payments which could be made to any individual participating in the program.

1950: Congress authorized an extension of the soil conservation program through 1952. A proposal to put the program on a grants-in-aid basis in the future (requiring state participation as a basis for federal grants) was eliminated. The Senate took action by voice vote. The only vote in the House was on a motion to recommit, which was rejected, 120-179 (D 29-156, R 91-22). (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 100.)

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

Democrats: "...continued expansion of the Rural Electrification Program..."

Republicans: "...and sound rural electrification."

1949: Congress amended the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 to permit REA to make loans for development and expansion of rural telephone service. Senate action was by voice vote. The House passed the bill, 282-109 (D 208-27, R 73-82). (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 147; House vote, p. 178.)

FARM CREDIT

Democrats: "...strengthening of all agricultural credit programs..."

PERFORMANCE

1949: Congress set up a new system for handling emergency loans to farmers and stockmen hit by disasters such as the severe snowstorms of the winter of 1948-49. The administration of disaster loans was placed directly under the Secretary of Agriculture, the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation abolished and its revolving fund of $1.2 million made available for disaster loan purposes, along with the $44 million revolving fund set up by the Farm Credit Act of 1933.

Congress also amended the Federal Farm Loan Act to extend credit to farmers in Alaska and Puerto Rico, and raised the limit on loans to a single borrower from $50,000 to $100,000. Provisions giving preference to loans of less than $10,000 were retained.

1950: Congress amended the disaster loan act passed in 1949 to provide that funds could also be used to make loans in areas previously served by the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation.

1951: The Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act was amended to revise the distribution system of available funds, making more money available to states and territories where the need is greatest. Another title of the same act was revised to increase the ceiling on reorganization and diversification loans, to make the initial loan limit $7,000 instead of $3,500, and the total debt limitation $10,000 instead of $5,000.

RESEARCH

Democrats: "...intensified research to improve agricultural practices, and to find new usages for farm products."

Republicans: "...intensified research to discover new crops, new uses for existing crops, and control of hoof and mouth and other animal diseases and crop pests..."

PERFORMANCE

1949: Congress authorized operations to combat the citrus blackfly, white-fringed beetle, and Hall scale.

1950: The Secretary of Agriculture was authorized to cooperate with state and territorial authorities in the administration of a poultry improvement program.

FARM COOPERATIVES

Democrats: "We will encourage farm cooperatives and oppose any revision of federal law designed to curtail their most effective functioning as a means of achieving economy, stability and security for American agriculture."

Republicans: "...support the principle of bona fide farmer-owned and farmer-operated cooperatives."

PERFORMANCE

No affirmative action to "encourage" and "support" cooperatives was taken over the 1949-1951 period. On the negative side--according to most cooperative groups--was the provision of the Revenue Act of 1951 which extended corporate taxes to many farm as well as other cooperatives which previously had been exempt. There were no record votes squarely on the issue of taxing co-ops.

CROP INSURANCE

Democrats: "...an extended crop insurance program..."

PERFORMANCE

1949: Crop insurance was set up in 1947 on an experimental basis in a limited number of counties, and on a limited number of commodities. Congress amended the law to authorize coverage of other commodities through "multiple crop insurance" where one grower was producing crops in addition to any of the insurable crops--cotton, wheat, corn, flax or tobacco. Congress also authorized an increase of 50 per cent each year in the number of counties in which each commodity could be insured, and extended the insurance on tobacco to cover the curing period. Insurance on all other crops is effective only while in the field.

OLEOMARGARINE

Democrats: "We favor the repeal of the discriminatory taxes on the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine."

PERFORMANCE

1949: The House passed a bill repealing taxes on oleomargarine, and permitting interstate shipment of clearly marked yellow oleomargarine. The final vote was bipartisan, 288-89 (D 202-22, R 85-67). Before passage the bill permitting interstate shipment was substituted for one repealing taxes but prohibiting interstate shipment. Vote on this substitute was party line, 243-137 (D 184-40, R 58-97). (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 178.)

1950: The Senate followed through in 1950, also passing the bill by a bipartisan majority, 56-16 (D 34-4, R 22-12), after rejecting by a party-line vote, 37-48 (D 10-37, R 27-11), an amendment which would have banned interstate sale of yellow oleo. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 80; Senate votes, p. 97.)

Education and Welfare

HEALTH

Democrats: "We favor the enactment of a national health program for expanded medical research, medical education, and hospitals and clinics."

Republicans: "Government...should take all needed steps to strengthen and develop public health... Consistent with the vigorous existence of our competitive economy, we urge...strengthening of federal-state programs designed to provide more adequate hospital facilities, to improve methods of treatment for the mentally ill, to advance maternal and child health and generally to foster a healthy America."

PERFORMANCE

1949: Congress passed legislation increasing aid to states for survey of hospital needs and construction of hospitals. Senate action was by voice vote. In the House a bipartisan majority supported the measure, 238-42 (D 163-6, R 75-36). (CQ Almanac, Vol. V., p. 328.)

The Senate approved a bill to provide federal grants and scholarships for medical education, but the House did not act and the bill died at the close of the 81st Congress.

The Senate also approved bills to provide aid to states in setting up and maintaining local public health services, and school health services. Neither bill became law because the House did not follow through.

The Senate passed by voice vote a bill to set up research programs on rheumatism, arthritis, metabolic diseases, neurological diseases, and blindness.

1950: The House completed action on the disease research program approved by the Senate in 1949 (see above), and the bill became law. There was no record vote on the measure. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 182.)

1951: The Senate again initiated action to provide aid to states for local public health services. The bill was passed, 38-35 (D 28-10, R 10-25). (For voting see page 202.)

The Senate also acted on a proposal to provide aid to medical education. The only record vote was on an amendment revising the schedule of grants to schools to increase the grant for new students while decreasing that for current students. This amendment was rejected, 23-42 (D 20-11, R 3-31). The bill was later recommitted, then reported again just before the first session adjourned. (See page 202.)

Both bills awaited further action in 1952.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Democrats: "We favor the extension of the Social Security Program established under Democratic leadership, to provide additional protection against the hazards of old age, disability, disease or death. We believe that this program should include: Increases in old-age and survivors' insurance benefits by at least 50 per cent, and reduction of the eligibility age for women from 65 to 60 years..."

Republicans: "Government should take all needed steps to...provide security for the aged... Consistent with the vigorous existence of our competitive economy, we urge extension of the federal old age and survivors' insurance program and increase of the benefits to a more realistic level."

PERFORMANCE

1949: The House passed without amendment legislation broadening social security coverage and liberalizing benefits. Passage was by a 333 to 14 roll-call vote. The Senate did not act on the measure. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 288.)

1950: Compromise legislation granting social security to 10 million more persons and increasing existing benefits by 70 to 100 per cent was passed by both the House and Senate and signed into law by President Truman. In the House, approval of the compromise was voted overwhelmingly, 374 to 1. The Senate approved the conference report by voice vote. (Senate votes, CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 201; House votes, CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 198.)

1951: The Senate passed a social security increase amendment to a House revenue bill, increasing federal contributions to public assistance payments by approximately $140 million. Passage was by voice vote. The proposal was referred to the House Ways and Means Committee, which took no action.

The Senate denied an Administration request that old age and survivors insurance benefits be increased by as much as were public assistance payments and rejected on a standing vote an amendment for a $3 across-the-board increase to all persons receiving social security insurance benefits.

An amendment permitting states to open their relief rolls to public inspection without forfeiting federal welfare funds was passed by the Senate on a roll-call vote of 38 to 30 (D 10-24, R 28-6). (See page 202.)

HOUSING

Democrats: "We shall enact comprehensive housing legislation, including provision for slum clearance and low-rent housing projects, initiated by local agencies."

Republicans: "Housing can best be supplied and financed by private enterprise; but government can and should encourage the building of better homes at less cost. We recommend federal aid to the states for local slum clearance and low-rental housing programs only where there is a need that cannot be met either by private enterprise or by the states and localities."

PERFORMANCE

1949: A comprehensive public housing and slum clearance program was approved. Money was authorized for federal loans to communities wishing a public housing development.

The House narrowly defeated a move to cut the entire public housing provision from the bill. The vote for the move was 204-209 (D 64-184, R 140-24). The final passage vote was 227-186 (D 192-55, R 34-131).

The Senate also rejected a move to drop public housing from the bill. The vote was 19-58 (D 6-35, R 13-23). Final passage was 57-13 (D 33-2, R 24-11). (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 273; votes pp. 328, 325, 326; public housing votes, p. 1721, 1722.)

1950: Congress passed a middle-income housing act, designed to provide federal mortgage insurance for private home loans. Special aid for cooperative and nonprofit housing projects was dropped.

In the House, loans to co-ops were deleted 218-155 (D 81-141, R 137-13). Final passage was 362-10 (D 220-0, R 141-10).

In the Senate, loans to co-ops were deleted 43-38 (D 13-32, R 30-6). The Senate passed the bill on voice vote.

1951: Congress approved a bill to provide $1.6 billion in federal aid for construction of homes in defense housing areas. Passage in both houses was by voice vote. (See page 184.)

EDUCATION

Democrats: "We advocate federal aid for education administered by, and under the control of the states. We vigorously support the authorization...for the appropriation of $300 million as a beginning of federal aid to the states to assist them in meeting the present educational needs. We insist upon the right of every American child to obtain a good education."

Republicans: "We favor equality of educational opportunity for all and the promotion of education and educational facilities."

PERFORMANCE

1949: The Senate approved a bill to provide $300 million a year in federal aid to states for public and private schools. Passage was voted 58-15 (D 36-3, R 22-12).

The program stalled in the House Committee where a still-unresolved dispute developed over the issue of aid to parochial schools.

A bill providing $5 million for a nationwide survey of school construction needs was approved by the Senate without record vote.

Congress approved a bill to aid schools in defense areas and on federal reservations. The bill, authorizing $7.5 million, was passed on voice votes.

1950: The major federal aid to schools bill remained stalled in a House committee.

Action was completed on the bill authorizing a survey program for schools in crowded areas. Authorization of emergency school construction in these areas was included, and later $50,165,000 was appropriated for these programs. There were no record votes.

A four-year program of federal aid to schools on or near federal installations was voted by Congress. Some $32 million was made available. There were no record votes.

The Senate voted $163 million in aid to states to promote library services, but the House rejected the measure 161-164 (D 145-51, R 15-113).

1951: Congress approved a bill to extend the aid programs in crowded areas and areas near federal installations. The House passed it 257-55 (D 134-33, R 123-22). The Senate approved it on voice vote.

President Truman vetoed the measure, saying it would have given aid to segregated schools.

NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION

Democrats: "We pledge the early establishment of a national science foundation under principles which will guarantee the most effective utilization of public and private research facilities."

Republicans: "Government...should take all needed steps to...promote scientific research."

PERFORMANCE

1949: A bill to set up a National Science Foundation, to promote basic research and extend scientific education, was approved by the Senate on voice vote. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 272.)

1950: The bill passed by the Senate in 1949 was amended by the House, to tighten security regulations, and passed, 247-126 (D 191-32, R 56-94). The Senate accepted the House amendments on voice vote. The bill authorized $500,000 to establish the Foundation and $15 million annually for operation.

EUROPEAN RECOVERY PROGRAM

Democrats: "We pledge a sound, humanitarian administration of the Marshall Plan...Therefore, we pledge that we will implement with appropriations the commitments which are made in this nation's foreign program."

Republicans: "Within the prudent limits of our own economic welfare, we shall cooperate, on a basis of self-help and mutual aid, to assist other peace-loving nations to restore their economic independence and the human rights and fundamental freedoms for which we fought two wars and upon which dependable peace must build. We shall insist on businesslike and efficient administration of all foreign aid."

PERFORMANCE

1949: The European Recovery Program, known popularly as the Marshall Plan, was extended for another year substantially in the same form as had originally been voted. The major difference was the removal of Greek-Turkish and China aid and the U.S. contribution to the International Children's Fund from the ERP Act. These items were considered in separate bills.

The bill authorized $5.43 billion to be spent from April 3, 1949, through June 30, 1950. The Senate passed its bill 70-7 (D 44-1, R 26-6). The House passed it 355-49 (D 230-10, R 125-38).

The ERP funds were cut when the money was actually appropriated. Final figure was $4.702 billion. The House approved the appropriation on standing vote, 193-27. The Senate approved it 63-7 (D 36-1, R 27-6). (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 196; Senate votes, p. 263.)

1950: Congress extended the Marshall Plan for another year, this time wrapping it in a large foreign aid package bill. For the Marshall Plan itself, $2.700 billion was authorized to be spent from July 1, 1950, through June 30, 1951.

Approvals were no longer by lopsided votes. The final bill was passed by the House 248-88, with a majority of Republicans voting against it (D 186-13, R 63-74). In the Senate, the final bill was approved 47-27. Votes tended to follow party lines (D 38-4, R 9-23).

Again funds were cut during action on ERP appropriations. The final money bill gave $2.250 billion. Neither house took a record vote on the final sum, but the Senate approved a $60 million increase in the appropriation 42-29 (D 34-8, R 8-21).

1951: Marshall Plan money was included in a $7.3 billion foreign aid bill, which carried both military and economic aid for a variety of countries. Economic aid authorized for the Marshall Plan countries totaled $1.022 billion.

The omnibus bill was approved in the Senate on a 61-5 vote (D 39-0, R 22-5). The House approved it 260-101. Again the Republicans were closely divided (D 179-20, R 80-81). (Senate vote, CQ Weekly Report p. 1721; House vote, p. 1722.)

Marshall Plan money was not reduced when the appropriation bill was passed. Senate passage of the omnibus foreign aid appropriation bill was 57-13 (D 40-1, R 17-12). The House approved it 222-99 (D 152-18, R 69-81).

RECIPROCAL TRADE

Democrats: "We pledge ourselves to restore the reciprocal trade agreements program formulated in 1934 by Secretary of State Cordell Hull and operated successfully for 14 years..."

Republicans: "At all times safe-guarding our own industry and agriculture, and under efficient administrative procedures for the legitimate consideration of domestic needs, we shall support the system of reciprocal trade and encourage international commerce."

PERFORMANCE

1949: Congress repealed the 1948 Republican-sponsored Trade Agreements Act and substituted for it an act almost identical with the pre-'48 Democratic program. In both houses, Republicans lost attempts to retain the "peril points" provision of the 1948 Act, which they said would protect domestic industries.

The new law was to run for three years, the starting date made retroactive to June 12, 1948, the starting date of the GOP bill.

Voting on amendments to the bill tended to follow party lines. Voting on peril points had Republicans almost 100 per cent opposed to the majority of Democrats. On final passage of the bill, however, many Republicans voted for the measure--with the Democrats.

Final House vote was 319-69 (D 234-6, R 84-63). Senate vote was 62-19 (D 47-1, R 15-18).

(CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 362; House votes, p. 424, Senate votes, p. 431.)

1950: There was no Congressional action on Reciprocal Trade Agreements.

1951: The Trade Agreements Act was extended through June 12, 1953, but the peril points provision was restored to the program, and the President's powers to negotiate agreements were reduced in several ways.

The peril points provision provided that tariffs could not be cut beyond a point below which American industries would be endangered. Peril points were added to the bill in the House on a 225-168 vote (D 42-163, R 183-4). No attempt was made to remove peril points in the Senate. Passage was voted 72-2 (D 38-0, R 34-2).

FOREIGN ARMS AID

Democrats: Their 1948 platform stressed the desirability of "establishing measures for peace and the prevention of aggression and the threat of another war... We pledge continued support of regional arrangements within the United Nations Charter..."

Republicans: "We believe in collective security against aggression and in behalf of justice and freedom."

PERFORMANCE

1949: To implement the North Atlantic Treaty, the Mutual Defense Assistance Act was passed, authorizing a total of $1,314,010,000 to be spent for military aid to Treaty nations and to Iran, Greece, Turkey, Korea, the Philippines and "the general area of China." Of this, $1 billion was for Treaty nations.

The Senate passed the bill 55-24 (D 36-10, R 19-14). The House, which originally had voted $580 million for the Treaty nations, accepted the Senate figure in the final version of the bill, 224-109 (D 173-24, R 51-84).

All funds authorized were approved in a later appropriation bill. Passage was on voice vote in both houses.

1950: The Senate began to debate extension of the foreign arms aid program just 72 hours before war broke out in Korea. The Senate cut short its debate when fighting started and approved the bill without a dissenting vote.

The bill authorized $1,222,500,000 in foreign arms aid, $1 billion of the total for Europe. Senate approval was voted 66-0. The House followed suit 362-1. Vito Marcantonio (ALP N.Y.) voted against it.

There were no cuts in the program when Congress later approved the arms aid appropriation.

1951: Congress authorized almost $6 billion in arms aid money, more than $5 billion of it for Europe, in the omnibus foreign aid bill. The European arms money was cut slightly in the appropriation bill.

ARMAMENTS

Democrats: "We advocate the effective international control of weapons of mass destruction, including the atomic bomb, and we approved continued and vigorous efforts within the United Nations to bring about the successful consummation of the proposals which our Government has advanced. The adoption of these proposals would be a vital and most important step toward safe and effective world disarmament and world peace under a strengthened United Nations which would then truly constitute a more effective parliament of the world's peoples."

Republicans: "We shall relentlessly pursue our aims for the universal limitation and control of arms and implements of war on a basis of reliable disciplines against bad faith."

PERFORMANCE

In the absence of any international agreement on arms reduction, Congress could do little but discuss the theory of disarmament.

DISPLACED PERSONS

Democrats: "We pledge ourselves to legislation to admit a minimum of 400,000 displaced persons found eligible for United States citizenship without discrimination as to race or religion. We condemn the undemocratic action of the Republican 80th Congress in passing an inadequate and bigoted bill for this purpose, which law imposes un-American restrictions based on race and religion upon such admissions."

Republicans: The 1948 platform cited as one of the "accomplishments of the Republican Congress" (80th Congress) the provision of a "haven for displaced persons." No further mention of displaced persons was made.

PERFORMANCE

1949: The House passed a bill to liberalize the existing DP law by increasing the number of persons eligible to come to the U.S. from 205,000 to 339,000. There was no record vote. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 371).

The Senate did not complete action on the bill.

1950: The Senate passed a broader substitute bill, shunting aside its original bill on a 49-25 vote (D 25-11, R 24-14). The two houses reconciled differences in the two bills and, on voice vote, agreed to admit 415,744 DP's.

1951: Congress extended the time limit on entrance of DP's, but did not increase the number to be admitted.

CHINA

Republicans: "We will foster and cherish our historic policy of friendship with China and assert our deep interest in the maintenance of its integrity and freedom."

The Democrats made no specific mention of China in their platform.

PERFORMANCE

1949: After partisan clashes over U.S. policy toward China, Congress voted $54 million in economic aid for non-Communist China. The only roll-call vote on the issue was in the House, 279-70 (D 163-40, R 116-29). (For roundup of China bills and debate, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 375; House vote, p. 424).

1950: A provision of the Foreign Economic Assistance Act authorized the President to use some $100 million in previously appropriated, but never expended, China aid money, to be used for non-Communist China and for Chinese students in this country. There was no record vote on this provision. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 204).

The fund had been kept alive earlier in the year by the Korean-Formosan Aid Act. The only record vote was in the House, where the bill passed 240-134 (D 198-42, R 42-91).

(CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 223; House votes, p. 260).

1951: China was the subject of some of the longest, most bitter partisan debates in Congress. The investigation into the firing of Gen. Douglas A. MacArthur covered U.S. China policy in detail.

China was voted $237.5 million in economic aid as part of the omnibus foreign aid act. There were no record votes on the China provisions.

Congress approved, without record vote, a resolution urging a UN embargo on Communist China. The Senate and House approved separate resolutions expressing the opinions of the respective houses that Red China was the aggressor in Korea.

Both houses passed separate resolutions expressing the opinions that Red China should not be admitted to the UN. The Senate held a roll-call vote on this issue, approving it 91-0.

UN STRENGTHENING

Democrats: "We support the United Nations fully and we pledge our whole-hearted aid toward its growth and development...We will continue to lead the way toward curtailment of the use of the veto."

Republicans: "We shall support the United Nations ...striving to strengthen it and promote its effective evolution and use. The United Nations should...be freed of any veto in the peaceful settlement of international disputes, and be provided with the armed forces contemplated by the Charter."

PERFORMANCE

Although the UN was discussed frequently in Congress, no legislation was acted on which stemmed directly from the platforms.

REGIONAL PACTS

Democrats: "We pledge continued cooperation with the countries of the Western Hemisphere. We pledge continued support of such regional arrangements...as the Inter-American Regional Pact and the developing Western European Union."

Republicans: "We cite the Western Hemispheric Defense Pact as a useful model. We shall nourish these Pan-American agreements in the new spirit of cooperation which implements the Monroe Doctrine." "We welcome and encourage the sturdy progress toward unity in Western Europe."

PERFORMANCE

1949: The Senate ratified the North Atlantic Pact, 82-13 (D 50-2, R 32-11)

The Institute of Inter-American Affairs was extended through June 30, 1955, and broadened in scope. The group conducts health, education and agricultural programs in 16 Latin American countries. Passage was on voice vote.

PEACE TREATIES

Democrats: "We pledge our best endeavors to conclude treaties of peace with our former enemies...We shall strive to conclude treaties...based on justice and with guarantees against the revival of aggression, and for the preservation of peace."

Republicans: "We shall seek to restore autonomy and self-sufficiency as rapidly as possible in our postwar occupied areas, guarding always against any rebirth of aggression."

PERFORMANCE

1951: Congress passed a resolution terminating the war with Germany. House action was on a 380-0 roll-call vote. The Senate passed it on voice vote. (See page 213.)

A Japanese peace treaty was signed in San Francisco, but it was not submitted to the Senate for ratification before the end of the session.

ISRAEL

Democrats: "We pledge full recognition to the State of Israel...We pledge appropriate aid...in developing its economy and resources...We favor the revision of the arms embargo to accord to...Israel the right of self-defense."

Republicans: "We pledge to Israel full recognition...and aid in developing its economy."

PERFORMANCE

1949: An act authorizing $16 million for a UN fund to care for Palestine refugees, mostly for Arabs, but including some Jews, was approved without a record vote. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 361).

1950: The Foreign Economic Assistance Act included $27,450,000 for continued contributions to the Palestine Refugee Fund. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 204).

1951: Congress authorized a $50 million expenditure for aid to refugees in Israel. The action, in the omnibus foreign aid bill, was not subject to a roll-call vote.

Labor

LABOR LEGISLATION

Democrats: "We advocate the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act...We advocate such legislation as is desirable to establish a just body of rules to assure free and effective collective bargaining to determine, in the public interest, the rights of employees and employers to reduce to a minimum their conflict of interests and to enable unions to keep their membership free from Communist influences."

Republicans: "Collective bargaining is an obligation as well as a right, applying equally to workers and employers...We pledge continuing study to improve labor-management legislation in the light of experience and changing conditions."

PERFORMANCE

1949: Democrats in both chambers introduced legislation to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act, but enough Democrats voted with the Republicans to sidetrack the repeal proposals.

In the Senate, the Administration forces' bill was superseded by a Republican-backed measure to clarify the Taft-Hartley Act and outlaw the union shop. There were 10 roll calls on the subject in the Senate. In the final one, the GOP version was passed, 51-42, with 17 Democrats joining 34 Republicans for passage, while 35 Democrats and 7 Republicans were opposed. The House did not take up this bill.

In the House a move to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act and restore the Wagner Act unamended was rejected 37-275 on teller vote. Rep. Vtio Marcantonio (ALP N.Y.) made the proposal. A modified Taft-Hartley substitute bill was accepted May 3 as an amendment to the Administration bill, 217-203 (D 71-180, R 146-22). The next day a motion to send the bill back to committee was passed, 212-209. Ten Southern and Border Democrats who had supported the Wood bill switched stands. The breakdown on recommittal was 193-62 for Democrats, 18-147 for Republicans.

1950: The House Education and Labor Committee took no further action either on the Senate-passed "revised Taft-Hartley" bill or on its own version, which had been described as "Taft-Hartley with a Southern accent."

The Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee reported a bill which would have waived the Taft-Hartley ban on the closed shop to permit waterfront hiring halls for seamen, but the bill did not come up for floor action.

Congress also passed legislation amending the Railway Labor Act to extend to the railway and airlines industries permission to make union shop and payroll check-off agreements, which the Taft-Hartley law permitted other industries. The Taft-Hartley bill ruled out union shop arrangements where they were banned by state law, but an effort to include this provision for the railroad workers was defeated by a 23-59 vote of the Senate (D 13-29, R 10-30). The bill was passed by voice vote of the Senate.

The House vote for final passage was 292-52 (D 176-42, R 115-10).

(Rail Labor Act revision, CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 281; Senate vote, p. 289; House vote, p. 290).

1951: The Taft-Hartley Act was amended by a bipartisan measure (S 1959) sponsored by Sens. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) and Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) to eliminate compulsory elections before establishment of union shops, and to validate those union-shop elections held before labor union leaders took non-Communist oaths. The Senate passed the bill without objection, and the House 307-18. (D 154-13, R 152-5). (See page 268.)

LABOR DEPARTMENT

Democrats: "We urge that the Department of Labor be rebuilt and strengthened, restoring to it the units, including the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service and the United States Employment Service, which properly belong to it..."

Republicans: "Government's chief function in this field is to promote good will, encourage cooperation, and where resort is had to intervention, to be impartial, preventing violence and requiring obedience to all law by all parties involved."

PERFORMANCE

1949: The Labor Department was strengthened by approval of a reorganization plan to transfer to it the Veterans Placement Service Board, the Federal Advisory Council and the Bureau of Employment Security, which administers the United States Employment Service and the Unemployment Insurance Service. The vote against disapproving the plan was 32-57 (D 8-45; R 24-12). (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 562, 563).

1950: During 1950, several reorganization plans strengthening the Labor Department became effective (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 336-371). The Bureau of Employees Compensation and the Employees Compensation Appeals Board were transferred from the Federal Security Agency to the Department of Labor, and the Secretary of Labor was given more administrative authority, including responsibility over the Wage and Hour Division which had previously functioned semi-independently. These were not important controversial issues.

1951: Bills were introduced in both House and Senate to transfer the Selective Service System and the minimum wage functions of the Federal Maritime Board to the Department of Labor, but were not acted upon.

EQUAL PAY

Democrats: "We favor legislation assuring that the workers of our nation receive equal pay for equal work regardless of sex."

Republicans: "We favor equal pay for equal work regardless of sex."

PERFORMANCE

1949: Bills and resolutions were introduced in both houses of Congress to establish equal rights for women, but despite bipartisan backing, they received no action in 1949.

1950: The Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee, after studying testimony given the House Education and Labor Subcommittee and testimony on comparable legislation from previous Congresses, voted 8-4 to report a bill (S 706) requiring equal pay for equal work, regardless of sex. The House Subcommittee which conducted hearings approved a similar bill, but the full Committee did not report it.

1951: Numerous bills were introduced, but there was no action.

MINIMUM WAGE

Democrats: "We favor the extension of the coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act as recommended by President Truman, and the adoption of a minimum wage of at least 75 cents an hour in place of the present obsolete and inadequate minimum of 40 cents an hour."

Republicans: There was no specific mention of this issue, but the platform said, "There must be decent living at decent wages."

PERFORMANCE

1949: A minimum wage of 75 cents an hour was adopted, but coverage under the Fair Labor Standards Act was limited instead of broadened before final acceptance of a conference bill by both chambers. The conference bill (HR 5856) was passed by voice vote in the Senate and by a division vote in the House.

The House had passed its version by a 361-35 roll-call vote (D 221-23, R 139-12). Prior to passage the Democrats split, the southern Democrats preferring further exemptions from coverage and the northern Democrats voting against them. The amendment providing the 75 cents minimum with larger exemptions was accepted by a roll-call vote of 225-181 (D 82-168, R 143-12).

The Senate passed the bill by voice vote, first rejecting several amendments calling for lower minimums. The votes rejecting the lower minimums were 26-51 (D 16-26, R 10-25), 25-51 (D 13-28, R 12-23) and 20-54 (D 14-27, R 6-27).

It was estimated the final conference bill raised wages for about 1,500,000 workers and exempted about 500,000.

Military and Veterans

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Democrats: "We pledge to maintain adequate military strength--sufficient to fulfill our responsibilities in occupation zones, defend our national interests, and to bolster those free nations resisting Communist aggression."

Republicans: "We propose the maintenance of armed services for air, land and sea, to a degree which will insure our national security..."

PERFORMANCE

1949: The first session of the 81st Congress passed a number of bills strengthening the national defense. Among these, the following passed both houses by voice vote: A bill authorizing establishment of a system of air warning control systems; a bill authorizing construction of Alaska Communications System stations; a bill authorizing expansion and improvement of military installations at Okinawa and Alaska; two bills providing for expansion of guided-missile research and testing; a bill providing for an air engineering development center, with transsonic and supersonic wind tunnel facilities.

Congress also authorized the establishment of the Central Intelligence Agency. The Senate acted by voice vote. The House went on record by an overwhelming majority of 348-4.

Most of the action on the Army-Air Force Composition Act was completed in 1949, although it did not become law until 1950 when the conference version was approved. The Act established ceilings for personnel strength of the Army, National Guard, and Organized Reserve, and for the Air Force, Air National Guard, and Air Force Reserve. It also authorized an Air Force of 70 groups.

The House and Senate disagreed on the size of the Air Force when it came to the military appropriation bill. The House allowed money for a 58-group Air Force, and the Senate cut this to 48 groups by a roll-call vote of 49-9 (D 28-5, R 21-4). The House insisted on 58 groups by a vote of 306-1, and finally won its point in conference. The other item in disagreement was a Senate cut of $275 million from funds previously approved for stockpiling. The House voted 306-0 against agreeing to the Senate amendment. Conferees finally agreed to trim stockpiling funds by $100 million.

1950: A number of measures to increase the military strength of the country were passed in 1950. Among these were: Authorization of $585 million for construction at military and naval installations within and outside the continental United States; authorization of $250 million for construction and expansion of armories for reserve training; authorization of $350 million for construction and modernization of naval vessels. These bills went through by voice vote.

Following the outbreak of hostilities in Korea, Congress voted to suspend, until July 1, 1954, existing ceilings on the size of the armed forces; provided family allowances for dependents of members of the armed forces (the vote in the House was 362-0); authorized the President to institute wartime security measures to protect U.S. port and territorial waters, where necessary, and to control the anchorage and movement of foreign vessels in U.S. waters.

Defense activities were exempted from the across-the-board cuts made in the omnibus appropriation bill.

1951: The program of expanding the military potential of the country was continued in 1951. The largest "peacetime" military and naval construction program -- to the tune of $5.86 billion -- was authorized. Over half of this amount was for construction at air force installations. The vote in the House was 353-5. The Senate passed the measure by voice.

The Senate also approved by voice vote a bill which had passed the House, 365-0, to authorize construction of 500,000 tons of modern naval vessles (including a "supercarrier") and modernization of 1 million tons of existing vessels.

A $56 billion appropriation for the Defense Department passed the House, 348-2. The Senate approved $59 billion by unanimous vote, 79-0. Before final passage in the Senate amendments to reduce the figure to $56 billion or $55 billion were rejected, 29-49, and 29-51, respectively. A majority of Democrats voted against the cuts, a majority of Republicans for them. The figure finally approved in conference was $56.9 billion.

DRAFT, UMT

The Democrats had no specific mention on either a draft or Universal Military Training in their platform.

Republicans: "We favor sustained effective action to procure sufficient manpower for the services, recognizing the American principle that every citizen has an obligation of service to his country."

PERFORMANCE

1949: No action.

1950: The Selective Service Extension Act of 1950 was signed into law by President Truman June 30, five days after the outbreak of the Korean war. The measure had been approved by the House June 27, 315-4. It was adopted by the Senate 76-9 on June 28.

A 12-months extension of all enlistments then being served by members of the armed forces was adopted by both the House and Senate by voice vote.

Congress passed a bill permitting men to be inducted into the Coast Guard under provisions of the Selective Service Law. Legislation bringing professional medical men under the draft law was passed by the Senate and House after a conference ironed out minor differences.

A bill authorizing enlistment of 2,500 selected aliens in the U.S. Army was passed by the House 201-84 and by the Senate by voice vote.

(Draft, CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 294, votes p. 355, 358; enlistments, p. 300; doctor-dentist draft, p. 315; vote, p. 358; alien enlistments, p. 310, votes p. 356).

1951: Both Senate and House approved the Universal Military Training and Service Act which extended the draft to July 1, 1955; reduced the draft age to 18½ years; placed a ceiling of 5 million on the armed forces until July 31, 1954; and provided for future establishment of a National Security Training Corps.

In the Senate, two attempts to delete the Universal Military Training provisions were turned back by bipartisan majorities. An amendment to delete UMTS was rejected, 20-68 (D 2-44, R 18-24). A substitute for the Draft-UMT bill providing only for extension of the draft and lowering of draft age was turned down, 18-64 (D 1-42, R 17-22). The Senate passed the bill, 79-5.

The conference report on the controversial measure was adopted by voice vote in the Senate, and by a vote of 339-41 in the House.

UNIFICATION

The Democrats made no specific mention of unification in their platform.

Republicans: "We ...propose...the achievement of effective unity in the Department of National Defense so as to insure maximum economy in money and manpower and maximum effectiveness in case of war."

PERFORMANCE

1949: Legislation was enacted changing the National Security Act of 1947 by replacing the National Military Establishment with an executive-level Department of Defense. It gave the Defense Secretary control over armed services (instead of previous general coordination authority) and powers to end duplication and overlapping in procurement, supply, transportation, storage, personnel, health and research.

Both Senate and House committees held extensive hearings on unification amendments. The Senate passed its bill with most of the provisions finally contained in the new law. The House passed its version with only the budgetary reforms. A conference resolved most of the differences in favor of the Senate. The House accepted the conference report, 356-7, the Senate by voice vote.

1950: The House and Senate approved a special bill allowing Gen. George C. Marshall to be appointed Secretary of Defense. The bill set aside a provision in the Unification Act of 1947 barring from the post any person who had served as an officer in the armed forces during the previous 10 years. The House passed the bill, 220-105, (D 193-5, R 27-100) and the Senate, 47-21 (D 37-1, R 10-20).

1951: No action.

VETERANS' BENEFITS

Democrats: "We pledge ourselves to the continuance and improvement of our national program of benefits for veterans and their families...Employment and economic security must be afforded all veterans. We pledge a program of housing...at prices they can afford to pay...The disabled veteran must be provided with medical care and hospitalization of the highest possible standard."

Republicans: "Recognizing the nation's solemn obligation to all veterans, we propose a realistice and adequate adjustment of benefits on a cost-of-living basis for service-connected disabled veterans and their dependents, and for the widows, orphans and dependents of veterans, who died in the service of their country.

All disabled veterans should have ample opportunity for suitable, self-sustaining employment."

PERFORMANCE

1949: The House made two attempts to provide pensions for veterans reaching the age of 65. The first bill, which would have provided pensions of $90 a month at age 65, with $60 a month for younger veterans with disabilities, was recommitted by a one-vote margin, 208-207 (D 151-100, R 57-106). The second bill would have provided pensions of $72 a month at age 65, and $60 a month for younger veterans with disabilities ranging from 50 to 70 per cent. It passed the House, 365-27, but failed to get Senate action before the end of the 81st Congress.

Both houses approved a bill increasing compensation for disabled veterans and dependents, widows and children by 8½ per cent. The House vote was 354-0. The Senate passed the measure by voice.

A law authorizing government aid in provision of special housing facilities for paralyzed veterans was extended to include veterans whose special needs were caused by amputation or muscular dystrophies, or who were paralyzed as a result of brain injuries.

Both houses passed a bill amending provisions of a law authorizing the VA to pay up to $1600 on purchase of specially equipped automobiles. The new bill, in addition to extending time of the law, included World War I veterans and certain World War II veterans who had not been included previously. The President vetoed the bill, saying that while the original provision served as rehabilitative assistance to veterans who had lost, or lost the use of, one or both legs, the extension of this benefit to blind veterans, or veterans who had lost, or lost the use of one or both hands, was unnecessary.

1950: The House launched an investigation of the GI education program, to determine whether the veterans were actually getting useful training, and whether the government was getting its money's worth. As a result of studies made by a special committee, legislation was passed tightening the requirements for profit-making schools. Provisions of the law were also liberalized to permit some changes in course of study by veterans.

Both houses extended, by voice vote, the cars-for-amputees program, without the features the President had objected to in the 1949 measure.

Veterans who had left the postal service to enter the armed forces, and then returned to their old jobs, were given credit in grade, seniority, and compensation for the period spent in the armed service. A bill to provide similar credit for veterans who entered the postal service for the first time after World War II was vetoed. The House voted 213-72 to override, but the move failed in the Senate, where a vote of 48-29 did not give the necessary two-thirds majority. On this vote Democrats split 22-23, Republicans voted 26-6.

Both houses successfully overrode a veto of a bill providing further benefits for veterans of the Spanish-American war, Boxer Rebellion, and Philippine Insurrection. The bill provided out-patient treatment for all of these veterans, on the same basis, whether for service-connected or non-service-connected reasons. The vote in the House was 321-12, in the Senate 58-3.

1951: Congress extended vocational rehabilitation benefits, hospitalization benefits, and housing preferences to veterans of the Korean conflict, on the same basis as veterans of World War II.

Congress further amended legislation concerning housing for veterans to provide for treble damage action against anyone selling an overpriced house to a veteran under a guaranteed loan.

The first session of the 82nd Congress passed two veterans' bills over the President's veto. A bill providing for automobiles for veterans, with provisions almost identical to those in the 1949 bill which was vetoed, was passed over the veto in the Senate, 55-10, and in the House, 223-53.

A bill providing a pension of $120 a month for World War I, World War II, and Korea veterans who require constant attendance of another person as result of non-service-connected disability, was passed over the veto -- in the House, 318-45, and in the Senate, 69-9.

National Service Life Insurance was discontinued, and instead Congress substituted a provision for payment of a $10,000 indemnity to survivors of servicemen killed in line of duty, and authorized provision of government insurance for servicemen unable to obtain it from commercial sources for service-connected reasons. The bill was passed by the House, 390-0, and by the Senate by voice.

Miscellaneous and Administrative

POLL TAX

Democrats: "We call upon the Congress to support our President in guaranteeing the basic and fundamental right...of full and equal political participation..."

Republicans: "We favor the abolition of the poll tax as a requisite to voting."

PERFORMANCE

1949: A majority of both parties in the House voted 273-116 to abolish the poll tax as a prerequisite in voting for national officers (92 Democrats and 24 Republicans against). The Senate took no action after a subcommittee approved the resolution. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 589).

1950: There was no action on any specific anti-poll tax legislation. In the Senate, a poll-tax rider to the oleo tax bill was tabled. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, pp. 82-83.)

1951: No action.

ANTI-LYNCHING

Democrats: "We endorse the right of security of person..."

Republicans: "Lynching or any other form of mob violence anywhere is a disgrace to any civilized state, and we favor the prompt enactment of legislation to end this infamy."

PERFORMANCE

1949: Both houses held hearings on bills outlawing lynching; a Senate committee approved one, but in neither chamber was any bill reported for action. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 591).

1950: There was no action on any specific anti-lynching legislation. In the Senate, an anti-lynching rider to the oleo tax bill was tabled. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 82).

1951: No action.

FEPC

Democrats: "We endorse the right to equal opportunity of employment..."

Republicans: "This right of equal opportunity to work and to advance in life should never be limited in any individual because of race, religion, color or country of origin. We favor the enactment and just enforcement of such federal legislation as may be necessary to maintain this right at all times in every part of this Republic."

PERFORMANCE

1949: The FEPC bill underwent hearings in the House. Committees of both houses reported the bill, but there was no action. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 455).

1950: In the House, after weeks of political maneuvering by opponents of the bill to prevent action, a substitute providing for an FEPC with investigating and recommending powers only was approved 240-177 (D 116-134, R 124-42). Southern Democrats, with a few exceptions, were solidly opposed. The Senate took no action after two failures to invoke cloture on a motion to take up the bill. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 375).

1951: No action.

MILITARY SEGREGATION

Democrats: "...and the right of equal treatment in the service and defense of our nation."

Republicans: "We are opposed to the idea of racial segregation in the armed services of the United States.'

PERFORMANCE

1949: When the House was considering a bill to establish a Women's Reserve in the Coast Guard, an amendment banning segregation or discrimination in was agreed to, but the bill immediately was recommitted. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 505).

1950: The House, during consideration of draft extension, rejected two amendments banning segregation and discrimination. In the Senate, a committee provision which gave inductees the right to be assigned to units of members of their own race if they did not wish to be in mixed units was debated. An amendment to strike out voluntary segregation was agreed to, 42-29 (D 16-25, R 26-4). Another amendment to provide segregation if a majority of draftees preferred was rejected, 27-45 (D 24-16, R 3-29). (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, pp. 295, 297).

1951: No action.

UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Democrats: "We reiterate our pledge to expose and prosecute treasonable activities of anti-democratic and un-American organizations...We shall continue vigorously to enforce the laws against subversive activities, observing at all times the Constitutional guarantees which protect free speech, the free press and honest political activity. We shall strengthen our laws against subversion to the full extent necessary, protecting at all times our traditional individual freedoms."

Republicans: "We pledge a vigorous enforcement of existing laws against Communists and enactment of such new legislation as may be necessary to expose the treasonable activities of Communists..."

PERFORMANCE

1949: The House endorsed its own standing Committee on Un-American Activities by appropriating $200,000 for it by a vote of 353-29. The Committee held extensive hearings. A Senate committee conducted hearings on two bills to stifle Communist activities, but reported neither. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, pp. 597, 674).

1950: The House voted its Un-American Activities Committee another $150,000, 384-12. The Committee conducted hearings and cited for contempt 56 persons who refused to answer questions. A Senate committee conducted hearings on loyalty in the State Department.

The President vetoed a bill which required Communists to register; set up a Subversive Activities Control Board; barred members of Communist organizations from government or defense jobs; banned picketing of federal courts. Both houses overrode the veto overwhelmingly. Dissenting in the House were 45 Democrats and two Republicans; in the Senate 10 Democrats.

Both houses passed a bill calling for registration of foreign agents. Congress approved a bill empowering heads of 11 "sensitive" federal departments to dismiss summarily civilian government employees as bad security risks. A House motion to recommit to include right of appeal to the Civil Service Commission was rejected 144-193 (D 103-93, R 40-100). Final passage of the bill was bipartisan with only 12 Democrats and one Republican in opposition.

(Committee funds, CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 374; House vote, p. 556; veto, p. 390; House vote, p. 554; Senate vote, p. 543; Security risks, p. 398, House vote, p. 554).

1951: The House passed a resolution providing that exclusion of aliens for membership in fascist organizations should not apply in case of involuntary membership or membership before the age of 16 years. The Senate amended the terms to be applied to former members of Communist organizations. The House agreed to the Senate amendment.

CIVIL SERVICE

Democrats: "We will continue our efforts to improve and strengthen our federal civil service, and provide adequate compensation."

PERFORMANCE

1949: The Congress lived up to platform promises by approving federal and postal pay bills. It also approved a pay raise for executive officers, including the President, Vice President and Speaker of the House. The Senate vote was 52-14 with only Republicans dissenting. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 673).

1950: During debate of the Urgent Deficiency Appropriations, the Senate defeated an economy move to cut annual and sick leave of federal employees. The vote was 14-57; voting for the move were 3 Democrats and 11 Republicans. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 151).

1951: The Congress approved a pay raise for postal workers; the Senate was unanimously for the raise; in the House, four Democrats and three Republicans were in opposition. Both houses approved a federal pay raise, the Senate by voice, the House by 318-26, with six Democrats and 20 Republicans dissenting.

As part of the postal rates bill, a graduated annual leave plan for federal and postal employees was approved. (See pages 326, 328.)

EQUAL RIGHTS

Democrats: "We recommend to Congress the submission of a constitutional amendment on equal rights for women."

Republicans: "We recommend to Congress the submission of a constitutional amendment providing equal rights for women."

PERFORMANCE

1949: Bills were introduced to back up equal rights promises, but there was no action on them.

1950: The Senate passed the Equal Rights Amendment resolution by a vote of 63-19 (19 Democrats opposed). The House took no action. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 419).

STATEHOOD

Democrats: "We urge immediate statehood for Hawaii and Alaska; immediate determination by the people of Puerto Rico as to their form of government and their ultimate status with respect to the United States; and the maximum degree of local self-government for the Virgin Islands, Guam, and Samoa."

Republicans: "We favor eventual statehood for Hawaii, Alaska and Puerto Rico."

PERFORMANCE

1949: The House reported bills on statehood for Hawaii and Alaska, but no action resulted. The Senate held no hearings. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 600, 601).

1950: The House approved statehood for Alaska, 186-146 in a party-line vote (D 125-66, R 61-80). Hawaii statehood received bipartisan support and was approved 261-111. The Senate debated the bills, but a filibuster prevented action.

The Congress approved a bill providing for a Constitutional convention in Puerto Rico.

It enacted a bill granting American citizenship and limited self-government to the people of Guam. Administrative responsibility was transferred from the Navy to the Interior Department. (Statehood, CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 410; Puerto Rico, p. 409; Guam, p. 402).

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Republicans: "We favor self-government for the residents of the nation's capital."

PERFORMANCE

1949: The Senate passed by voice a home-rule bill for the District of Columbia. This was the first time home-rule legislation ever was passed by either house. The House held hearings, but took no further action. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, 1949, p. 576).

1950: President made two pleas for home rule, but nothing happened, after the Senate bill was reported.

1951: A Senate Committee held hearings and rejected a home-rule bill. Later it reported a home-rule bill and immediately decided to hold further hearings. The House took no action.

GOVERNMENT ECONOMY, EFFICIENCY, REORGANIZATION

Republicans: "Administration of government must be economical and effective. We pledge...that in the management of our national government, we shall achieve the abolition of overlapping, duplication, extravagance, and excessive centralization."

PERFORMANCE

1949: Congress allowed six of seven reorganization plans endorsed by the Hoover Commission to become effective. Various agencies and bureaus were transferred, and powers of their directors were redefined. A plan calling for creation of a Department of Welfare was rejected in the Senate by a vote of 60-32 (D 23-28, R 37-4). The House almost unanimously gave the President authority to propose reorganization plans. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, 1949, p. 554).

1950: Twenty of 27 Reorganization plans submitted went into effect. The Senate killed six, the House one. Notably rejected were plans to reorganize the National Labor Relations Board, revise Interstate Commerce Commission and Federal Communications Commission personnel, transfer the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the Commerce Department and create a Department of Health, Education and Security.

The Congress authorized the President to make changes in the form of the national budget and of departmental estimates, and to modernize and simplify government accounting and auditing methods.

The President requested renegotiation powers and powers to reorganize certain federal agencies like the maritime and manpower units. The bill was split in two, and both houses approved only the renegotiation powers. (Reorganization, CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 362; accounting, p. 430; war powers, p. 462).

1951: Both houses, by failing to muster sufficient affirmative votes to disapprove the Reconstruction Finance Corporation reorganization plan, in effect approved the plan. The parties were almost unanimous in their stand, Democrats favoring the plan, Republicans opposed. The Senate vote was 41-33 (D 3-30, R 38-3); the House 200-198 (D 18-197, R 182-0).

The Congress refused to give the President authority to make temporary emergency reorganizations, the Senate by voice vote, the House by a vote of 169-227 (Democrats 163-46, Republicans 5-181).

ELECTORAL VOTE SYSTEM

Democrats made no mention in their platform.

Republicans: "We favor a revision of the procedure for the election of the President and Vice President which will more exactly reflect the popular vote."

PERFORMANCE

1949: Both houses reported resolutions to abolish the electoral college by amendment to the Constitution, but there was no further action. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 591).

1950: Northern Democrats joined in an unusual party split with Republicans in the House to defeat a proposed constitutional amendment which would have eliminated the present electoral college system of naming Presidents and Vice Presidents. The vote was 134-210 (D 86-116; R 48-93). The Senate approved the measure by a margin of three votes over the needed two-thirds majority, 64-27 (D 46-4; R 18-23). (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, page 388).

1951: The measure was reported in the Senate, but there was no action.

Taxes and Economic Policy

INFLATION, CONTROLS

Democrats: "We shall curb the Republican inflation. We shall put a halt to the disastrous price rises which have come as a result of the failure of the Republican 80th Congress to take effective action on President Truman's recommendations, setting forth a comprehensive program to control the high cost of living."

Republicans: "We pledge an attack upon the basic causes of inflation, including the following measures: Progressive reduction of the cost of government through elimination of waste...Stimulation of production as the surest way to lower prices..."

PERFORMANCE

1949: Congress voted to continue for seven months until Sept. 30, 1949, the program for allocating scarce materials by voluntary agreements in industry, agriculture and business with Presidential approval. The law also provided for canceling out transportation facilities and regulating commodity exchange trading. Both chambers passed the bill by voice votes. Before the Senate vote, an amendment to extend voluntary controls for 13 months was defeated, 31-48 (D 0-46, R 31-2).

Controls over the use of tin and tin products and imports of fats, oils, rice and rice products were extended until June 30, 1950.

A subcommittee of the Senate Agriculture Committee conducted hearings on the spread between the prices paid by consumers and the farm prices of dairy products, bread, coffee, and other items.

The Senate Banking and Currency Committee conducted hearings on bills to continue Federal Reserve authority to fix reserve requirements and extend control to non-member banks, and to continue consumer credit controls beyond June 30, 1949, but no action was taken on these measures.

The Senate Banking and Currency Committee held hearings on a bill to remove the existing 10-year time limit on the repayment of Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans, to allow the RFC to set a limit on any given loan, and to increase the amount of loans outstanding from $2.5 billion to $5 billion. The Committee did not report the bill, however.

The House by voice vote passed a bill to suspend the import duties on scrap lead, zinc, iron, steel and aluminum. The Senate Finance Committee reported the bill, but the Senate did not act upon it.

An "Economic Stability Act" which included the President's anti-inflation program was introduced by Chairman Brent Spence (D Ky.) of the House Banking and Currency Committee, but the bill never found a sponsor in the Senate. It would have authorized loans to private industry or state government to expand capacity for materials or facilities in short supply, established a procurement supply and voluntary allocation of essential scarce materials, mandatory priorities and allocations, and would have required 60 days' notice of price increases. It would also have established wage controls in price-fixed industries.

The Democratic majority of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report in March urged increased production of strategic and critical materials, allocation of selected goods, export controls, stand-by price controls, and consumer credit restrictions. The Republican members protested against what they termed government control of the economy. They agreed to continued banking and credit controls, but rejected other controls except through specific Congressional action, saying they saw no present danger of inflation.

The President in July also discussed inflation in the past tense. No legislation was passed.

The Congress passed the Defense Production Act of 1950 to increase the flow of war goods to Korea, provide a system of priorities and allocation of scarce defense materials, provide controls on real estate credit, set up labor-dispute settlement machinery, set up a standby program of price-wage controls.

The House passed the bill by a vote of 383-12. The President was given standby authority to stabilize prices and wages by voluntary controls or establishment of ceilings in a vote of 393-3. Sixty-two Democrats joined 140 Republicans to approve, 202-188, an amendment exempting construction from certain credit controls. Thirteen Republicans joined 210 Democrats to reject, 173-224, an amendment to confine credit controls to consumer and real-estate credit. An amendment to delete control of commodity speculation was agreed to 198-194 (D 78-164, R 120-29). The Senate passed the bill, 85-3. An amendment to eliminate selective controls and provide wage controls if and when price controls were effected was agreed to 50-36 (D 12-34, R 38-2). However, an amendment to strike out authority for standby wage-price controls was defeated 6-75).

The Congress extended for one year the President's authority to control imports of fats, oils, rice and rice products, but eliminated controls on coconut oil. Both houses passed the bill by voice votes. The only recorded vote was in the House, on a move for recommittal to include coconuts, which was rejected, 72-264. Democrats were almost unanimously against recommittal, with Republicans divided, 65-68; 94 Congressmen didn't vote.

Scrap metal duties were suspended until June 30, 1951. Attempts to continue suspension of copper import duties succeeded in the House, 283-58, with 30 Democrats and 27 Republicans dissenting. However, three attempts in the Senate failed.

1951: The Defense Production Act was extended one year and provided a system of priorities and allocation of scarce defense materials and facilities, authorized the President to requisition and condemn property and encourage expansion of defense plants, provided controls on credit, wages, prices and rents, and provided special machinery to settle defense labor disputes. Senate passage was 71-10 (only Republicans opposed). House passage was 323-92 (D 206-16; R 116-76). Both houses agreed to amendments prohibiting livestock slaughtering quotas. The House vote was 249-167 (D 93-130, R 156-36). The Senate vote was 47-33 (D 10-30, R 37-3). The House agreed to an amendment which in effect prohibited beef price rollbacks by 234-183 (D 110-113, R 124-69). The House also agreed to an amendment deleting authority to control commodity speculation 242-172 (D 90-133, R 152-38). The Senate agreed to an amendment prohibiting price ceilings lower than either price prevailing just before regulation or the price prevailing Jan. 25 to Feb. 24, 1951. The vote was 49-33 (D 12-30, R 37-3).

The President asked for repeal of certain provisions, among them the so-called Capehart amendment which specified that price ceilings should permit a seller to include in his price all cost increases incurred between start of the Korean war and July 26, 1951. The Senate modified the amendment to include "necessary and unavoidable" cost increases, not "all" cost increases. It passed the revised bill 49-21 (D 35-0, R 14-21). In the House the bill was shelved by the Rules Committee.

FISCAL POLICY; PUBLIC DEBT

Democrats: "We pledge the continued maintenance of those sound fiscal policies under which Democratic leadership have brought about a balanced budget and reduction of the public debt by $28 billion since the close of the war." "...and to continue to reduce the public debt."

Republicans: "...fiscal policies to provide increased incentives for production and thrift..." "reduction of the public debt."

PERFORMANCE

1949-51: Legislatively, there have been no changes in fiscal policy. However, persistent attempts were made in both parties to reduce figures in appropriations in 1949 through 1951.

TAXES

Democrats: "We shall endeavor to remove tax inequities...We favor the reduction of taxes, whenever it is possible to do so without unbalancing the nation's economy, by giving a full measure of relief to those millions of low-income families on whom the wartime burden of taxation fell most heavily."

Republicans: "We propose...the maintenance of federal finances in a healthy condition and continuation of the efforts so well started by the Republican Congress to reduce the enormous burden of taxation in order to provide incentives for the creation of new industries, and new jobs, and to bring relief from inflation."

PERFORMANCE

1949: To combat inflation the President asked $4 billion in additional taxes, increased social security contributions, and a flexible national tax program. By July, however, the President's Economic Report reflected changed economic conditions and he discussed inflation in the past tense. No new taxes were enacted, but neither were wartime excise taxes repealed.

Rep. Joseph W. Martin, Jr. (R Mass.) tried to dislodge from the House Ways and Means Committee a bill to terminate miscellaneous excises, but was unable to muster the necessary 218 signatures.

Sen. Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.) made several attempts to have excise taxes repealed, and achieved committee agreement in two cases.

Numerous changes were enacted in the Internal Revenue Code, most of them clarifying existing statutes. Some servicemen and farmers were given certain tax exemptions. The bills covering these changes were passed by voice votes.

1950: In order to finance the Korean war, pay for new armaments and curb inflation, Congress enacted a tax law boosting federal levies about $5.5 billion a year. The House passed the bill and approved the conference report almost unanimously. Before passage of the bill, the House turned down a move to recommit the bill with instructions to separate excise tax reduction from other tax boosts. The vote was 147-239 (D 3-229, R 144-9). The Senate passed the bill by voice. An amendment directing House and Senate committees to report early in the 82nd Congress a retroactive excess-profits tax bill was agreed to 42-36 (D 21-26, R 21-10).

The Congress imposed a stiff levy on "windfall" defense earnings. The bill was passed by the House, 378-20, after a GOP substitute for a lesser tax had been rejected by an almost party-line vote of 142-252 (D 1-242, R 144-10). The Senate approved the bill by voice.

Congress made taxable the untaxed incomes of insurance companies. Efforts in a separate bill to repeal excise taxes failed; repeal was shelved in the Revenue Act.

1951: Congress passed the Revenue Act of 1951 boosting federal taxes to $5.691 billion. The House adopted the second conference report in a vote of 185-160 (D 147-34, R 37-126). The Senate approved the second conference report by voice, but earlier passed the bill by 57-19 (D 38-5, R 19-14). Among other provisions the new tax bill increased individual and corporation income taxes, increased capital gains tax, made excess profits and excise tax changes.

The Senate passed a bill establishing a National Commission on Intergovernmental Relations which was to study, among other matters, overlapping taxes. The Senate later recalled the bill.

Democrats: "Small business ... must be protected against unfair discrimination and monopoly, and be given equal opportunities with competing enterprises to expand its capital structure."

Republicans: "Small business...must be encouraged through aggressive anti-monopoly action, elimination of unnecessary controls, protection against discrimination, correction of tax abuses, and limitation of competition by governmental organizations."

PERFORMANCE

1949: The ECA was instructed by Congress to aid small business participation in the foreign aid program. A special assistant to the ECA Administrator on small business's role in the program was authorized.

A resolution to set up a special Senate committee on small business did not get to the floor.

The Senate passed a bill to provide technical information to American businessmen, but there was no action in the House.

The Senate Small Business Committee which had functioned in the 80th Congress received permission and submitted reports on finance, taxation, newsprint, oil, steel.

1950: The President asked enactment of a five-point program to make it easier to finance small business. Only two points were acted upon. A bill to provide technical information to American businessmen was enacted. A plan to reorganize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was rejected by the Senate.

There were general provisions in the Defense Production Act of 1950 to encourage small-business enterprise in sharing defense contracts.

The Senate set up a Select Committee on Small Business, empowered to consider small business problems and report its findings, but not consider specific legislation. The vote was 56-26 (D 25-21, R 31-5). The Senate granted the Committee $10,000 to carry on its work. A bill to set up a Small Business Coordinator to see that small businesses got their share of government contracts was reported in the Senate, then recommitted. (Five-point program, CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 652; technical information, p. 656; RFC reorganization, p. 372; Senate committee, p. 541, 653).

1951: The Defense Production Act of 1951 created a Small Defense Plants Administration to encourage and assist small business participation in the defense effort.

The Senate Small Business Committee held hearings on shortages of aluminum, nickel and other strategic materials and the effect on small business.

MERCHANT MARINE

Democrats: "We will continue to maintain an adequate American merchant marine."

Republicans: "We propose...an adequate privately operated Merchant Marine."

PERFORMANCE

1949: Congress wrote into legislation extending the Marshall Plan a provision that U.S. shipping be used whenever possible to transport ECA commodities from American ports to maintain a 50-50 ratio between U.S. and foreign shipping.

The Independent Offices Appropriation bill was amended to include $3,434,950 to continue to pay expense allowances to cadets enrolled under the merchant marine training program.

A House subcommittee on maritime affairs of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee held hearings on liberalized subsidies for the merchant marine but no chamber action was taken.

1950: Congress extended for another year the Commerce Department's ship sales and charter authority. Both the House and Senate held hearings on shipping subsidy bills but took no action. An amendment to an omnibus funds bill increasing the amount provided for maritime training purposes by $2,525,340 was rejected in the House by a 141-194 teller vote. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 120).

1951: The Senate approved a bill to extend construction subsidies and to provide tax deferments for shipping lines building or repairing merchant marine vessels. Passage was on voice vote after defeat of a motion to recommit, 34-47. (D 8-35, R 26-12). The bill did not get to the House floor. (See page 544.)

RENT CONTROL

PERFORMANCE

The Senate voted 68-10 for passage of the bill and 78-11 for adoption of the final conference report. All opposing passage were Republicans. The more important votes preceding final passage were the "home rule" amendment, adopted by a roll-call vote of 45-35 (D 19-28, R 26-7); and an amendment to strike out provision for uniform eviction rules, defeated by a 42-44 vote (D 9-40, R 33-4). An Administration-backed amendment to extend rent controls two years was defeated when more Democrats than Republicans voted against it. The vote was 10-75 (D 10-39, R 0-36).

The votes by which the House passed the bill were 261-153 (D 199-52, R 61-101) and 263-144 (D 196-49, R 66-95). On the conference report, the key vote on "local option" was adopted when 71 Democrats, 63 from Southern states, joined Republicans to support it. The vote was 227-188 (D 71-181, R 156-6). Even more Democrats, 80 of them Southerners, supported an amendment to delete a provision permitting recontrol of hotels that had been decontrolled. This was adopted, 237-175, (D 84-166, R 153-8).

1950: Congress extended rent control to Dec. 30, 1950, and thereafter to June 30, 1951, on local option. Before the session ended, the Congress approved a second extension to March 31, 1951. Votes in both houses on the bill and amendments were party-line. In all cases, Democrats overwhelmingly favored extension, Republicans opposed. However, in the Senate the conference report on the first extension and passage of the second extension mustered a few more Republican votes. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, pages 662, 667).

1951: The Congress by voice vote passed stopgap legislation continuing rent control till June 30.

It approved the President's authority to control or recontrol residential rents in critical defense housing areas and to relax housing credit curbs in critical areas.

ANTI-TRUST LAWS

Democrats: "We pledge an intensive enforcement of the antitrust laws, with adequate appropriations. We advocate the strengthening of existing laws by closing the gaps which experience has shown have been used to promote the concentration of economic power."

Republicans: "Small business, the bulwark of American enterprise, must be encouraged through aggressive anti-monopoly action..."

PERFORMANCE

1949: The House Appropriations Subcommittee in a report directed the Justice Department's Anti-trust Division to increase its activities, especially in the food, clothing and housing fields. The Senate cut $100,000 from the sum the House had allocated for the Anti-trust Division, but in conference the additional $100,000 the House authorized was agreed to.

XUM

The House Judiciary Subcommittee on Monopoly conducted two series of hearings on monopoly and anti-trust problems.

The House passed a bill to exempt from Federal Power Commission jurisdiction "independent producers" of natural gas (those who do not own transmission facilities and have no connection with interstate pipeline firms) in those transactions (not violating the Sherman Anti-trust Act) with firms to which they are not linked. The bill was designed to "clarify" the FPC's power. The House passed the bill by a roll-call vote of 183-131 (D 93-97, R 90-34), after rejecting a motion for recommittal 124-187 (D 92-94, R 32-93).

When the Clayton Act was passed in 1914 mergers contributing to the growth of monopolies generally were accomplished by the transfer of stock, so the Clayton Act had prohibited this where the effect might injure competition. Thereafter, some mergers were effected through acquisition of assets. In 1949, the House voted to end this 223-92 (D 184-10, R 38-82), but the Senate did not act upon the measure.

A tie vote 29-29 (D 8-23, R 21-6) in the Senate prevented enactment of the basing-point bill, which repealed the Robinson-Patman Act and relaxed the laws against price discrimination and price fixing. The Senate passed it originally by voice vote. The House passed a modified bill, 305-22, with only 21 Democrats and one ALP member voting against it. The House adopted the conference report by a 200-104 vote (D 86-98, R 114-6). The final vote in 1949 was on a motion to postpone further consideration, which was rejected by the 29-29 vote.

1950: Congress amended the Clayton Act to make illegal the purchase of assets in restraint of trade, tending to lessen competition or to create monopoly. The House had passed the bill in 1949. The Senate vote was 55-22 with no Democrats opposed. The House passed by voice bills to allow the government to recover actual damages resulting from anti-trust law violations, and to boost fines for violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. Neither saw Senate action.

The President vetoed the basing-point bill. Votes on it in both houses had been party-line -- the Senate approved the conference report 43-27 (D 13-25, R 30-2). There was no attempt to override the veto.

The President vetoed the bill to amend the Natural Gas Act to exempt independent producers from Federal Power Commission jurisdiction. Senate passage had been on a party-line vote of 44-38 (D 28-16, R 16-22). The House had passed the bill in 1949. No attempt was made to override the veto.

(Assets, CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 661; basing points, p. 564; natural gas, p. 598).

1951: A bill making good faith a complete defense in price discrimination cases arising under the Robinson-Patman Act passed the Senate, 42-34, (D 9-28, R 33-6). It was pending before the House Judiciary when the session closed.

(Price vote, see page 544.)

FLOOD CONTROL; RIVERS AND HARBORS

Democrats: "We pledge to continue policy initiated by the Democratic Party of adequate appropriations for flood control for the protection of life and property... We will continue to improve the navigable waterways and harbors of the nation."

Republicans: "We favor progressive development of the nation's water resources for navigation, flood control and power, with immediate action in critical areas...We propose...the continued development of our harbors and waterways."

PERFORMANCE

1949: A $1 billion omnibus river and harbor and flood control bill was passed by the House. Passage was by a division vote of 202-1. The measure was reported by the Senate Public Works Committee but did not reach the Senate floor. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 773).

1950: The Senate completed action on the bill which the House had passed in 1949. Senate vote on passage was bipartisan, 53-19, but agreement on the conference report was party-line, 44-24. The Republicans were almost evenly divided, 16 for, 18 against. (Senate vote, CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, page 607). The House agreed to the conference report 210-137 (D 141-57; R 68-80). The Congress in passing its omnibus appropriations made provisions for rivers, harbors and flood control.

1951: The Congress appropriated more than $500 million for river and harbor and flood control projects in the Army Civil Functions bill. Two attempts in the Senate to cut rivers and harbors funds failed; one to cut funds 10 per cent was rejected 38-38 (D 11-32, R 27-6), Vice President Barkley casting the deciding vote. The large appropriation for flood control came as a result of the disastrous floods which struck the Midwest.

RECLAMATION

Democrats: "We favor acceleration of the federal reclamation program, the maximum beneficial use of water in the several states for irrigation and domestic supply. In this connection, we propose the establishment and maintenance of new family-size farms for veterans and others seeking settlement opportunities, the development of hydroelectric power and its widespread distribution over publicly owned transmission lines to assure benefits to the water users in financing irrigation projects, and to the power users for domestic and industrial purposes, with preference to public agencies and REA cooperatives."

Republicans: "We favor a comprehensive reclamation program for arid and semi-arid areas with full protection of the rights and interests of the states in the use and control of water for irrigation, power development incidental thereto and other beneficial uses."

PERFORMANCE

1949: Congress approved the following major reclamation bills:

The American River Basin Development in central California; the Weber Basin project in Utah; the Vermejo project in New Mexico (vetoed by President Truman); a measure providing for return of rehabilitation and betterment of costs of federal reclamation projects.

(CQ Almanac, Vol. V, pp. 766-768).

1950: The Congress authorized funds for Palisades Dam, a multiple-purpose reclamation development. It passed a bill to expedite emergency reclamation projects. It enacted a bill authorizing the Reclamation Bureau to construct, operate and maintain the Vermejo Reclamation Project.

The Senate approved the Central Arizona Project in a 55-28 vote (D 41-5, R 14-23) after several riders were rejected by party-line votes, Democrats opposing. A House committee then tabled the bill, and there was no further action. (Palisades, CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 613; emergency reclamation, p. 635; Vermejo, p. 660; Central Arizona, p. 659).

1951: The Senate passed the Central Arizona Project bill in a vote of 50-28 (D 38-3, R 12-25). The House held hearings, but took no action.

The Congress approved appropriations for the Reclamation Bureau in the Interior Department's appropriations for 1952, but placed restrictions on the Bureau's power to build transmission lines. The House had agreed to an amendment prohibiting spending of funds for construction of power transmission facilities within areas covered by power wheeling contracts serving federal establishments and preferred customers. The vote was 226-165 (D 67-140, R 158-25). The Senate modified the amendment to exempt lines for which funds had already been appropriated, or those where private companies were "unable or unwilling" to fulfill tranmsission contracts.

NATURAL RESOURCES

Democrats: "We shall expand our programs for forestation, for the improvement of grazing lands, public and private, for the stockpiling of strategic minerals and the encouragement of a sound domestic mining industry. We shall carry forward experiments for the broader utilization of mineral resources in the highly beneficial manner already demonstrated in the program for the manufacture of synthetic liquid fuel from our vast deposits of coal and oil shale and from our agricultural resources."

Republicans: "We favor conservation of all our natural resources and believe that conservation and stockpiling of strategic and critical raw materials is indispensable to the security of the United States. We urge the full development of our forests on the basis of cropping...We favor...withdrawal or acquisition of lands for public purposes only by act of Congress and after due consideration of local problems...development of processes for the extraction of oil and other substances from oil shale and coal..."

PERFORMANCE

1949: The Senate considered two bills to encourage exploration and development of mineral resources. One which would have provided a premium-price incentive payments plan was shelved in favor of a bill which would set up a National Minerals Board to administer the act, and permit negotiation of selective contracts for exploration and development of specific metals. The measure was passed by the Senate by voice vote. In the House it failed to get sufficient votes to pass under suspension of the rules; the vote was 176-118 (D 120-52, R 56-66). This prevented further consideration until 1950. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 685, House vote, p. 822).

1950: When the National Minerals Act came up for consideration in the House in 1950, it was rejected by a party-line vote of 144-166 (D 99-83, R 44-83). (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 638).

The Congress extended for five years the Interior Department's research and experimentation in synthetic fuels. In addition, the Senate approved funds for its Interior Committee to study available fuel supplies and to formulate a national fuel policy. (Minerals Act, CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 638; fuels policy, p. 659).

1951: The Senate Interior Committee held hearings on a national fuel policy, but no legislation resulted. In addition, there were hearings on manganese development and sulphur shortages.

The Revenue Act extended depletion allowances to cover borax, clay, sand, gravel, marble, etc., and increased the percentage allowance on some minerals which were already covered.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Democrats: "We pledge the continued full and unified regional development of the water, mineral, and other natural resources of the nation, recognizing that the progress already achieved under the initiative of the Democratic party in the arid and semi-arid states of the West, as well as in the Tennessee Valley, is only an indication of still greater results which can be accomplished."

The Republicans had no specific mention of this subject in their platform.

PERFORMANCE

1949: Numerous development proposals were embodied in a rivers and harbors and river valley development bill that cleared the House, but failed to get action in the Senate. Both houses held lengthy hearings on legislation to distribute water equitably among Western states, but no action was taken.

TIDELANDS

Democrats: There was no direct mention of tidelands in the platform. However, the platform said, "Our national resources are the heritage of all our people and must not be permitted to become the private preserves of monopoly."

Republicans: "We favor restoration to the States of their historic rights to the tide and submerged lands, tributary waters, lakes, and streams."

PERFORMANCE

1949: Federal versus states' rights to the ownership and control of the tidelands was considered in both houses. No legislative action was taken. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 770).

1950: Action was confined to committees. A House committee reported the bill favorably. The Senate got no further than hearings. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 642).

1951: Numerous measures were introduced. The House passed a bill confirming title of states to submerged lands and resources by a vote of 265-109 (D 109-91, R 156-17). A Senate committee held hearings and on the day before adjournment of the session, the committee voted to table the legislation. (House vote, page 475.)

TRUMAN VERSUS TAFT

Rival Party Leaders Agree on 22, Disagree on 44 Major Issues in Last 12 Years; Senator and GOP Stick Together More Often Than President, Democrats

Summary

How often did those two "old pros" of the rival political parties, President Truman and Sen. Taft, disagree?

They tangled on about two of every three important legislative issues during the past 12 years, according to a Congressional Quarterly survey of their stands and Senate voting records.

Of 67 key issues that came to record votes in the Senate from 1939 through 1951, President Truman and Sen. Taft were in disagreement on 44. Twenty-two times they agreed; and once, in 1943, the position of then-Sen. Truman was not recorded.

Over the years, Sen. Taft apparently spoke for the Republicans in the Senate more often than did Mr. Truman for the Democrats.

Sen. Taft, Chairman of the Senate Republican Policy Committee and the Senate's only announced Presidential candidate, either shared or shaped the position of the majority of the Senate Republicans on 59 of the 67 issues. He disagreed with his party's majority on eight.

The stand of Mr. Truman, titular head of the Democratic party and 1952 candidate-apparent, was with that of most Senate Democrats 53 times, opposed to the party majority in 13 instances.

SHARPLY DIVIDED

Moreover, the two party leaders have been very much at odds on several controversial topics--foreign policy, where they disagreed on 10 of 14 issues; economic controls, where they divided on every one of six issues; labor, in disagreement on four of six; defense, four of six; farm legislation, four of six; economy and spending, five of six, and on monopoly, states rights and security, where they never agreed in the course of five Senate showdowns.

Disparities were so great, CQ found, that voters choosing between the two veteran campaigners would have a number of sharply opposing policies on which to base their decisions.

CQ found some broad areas of agreement between Truman and Taft, however.

They were in disagreement only once in the course of six housing and education issues; twice in six civil rights votes, and split half the time on six key tax decisions.

Stands of both were made known on virtually every issue of major importance that developed since the threatening days before World War II. Sen. Taft was recorded on all the 67 big issues; Mr. Truman on all except a 1943 ballot on federal aid to education.

Truman and Taft -- Stands At A Glance

President Truman and Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) disagreed on nine of 17 major legislative issues from 1939 through 1951, a Congressional Quarterly survey shows. The rival party leaders were in general agreement on six other issues. On the remaining two (1951 tax hikes and FEPC) they were in partial accord on the programs but disagreed on the extent.

Here are the 17 issues (checks mean stands for; crosses mean stands against.)

XUM

ON 17 MAJOR ISSUES

When the list of issues was narrowed to those of top-flight importance, CQ found that the percentage of disagreement between Mr. Truman and Sen. Taft still held. On 17 issues of far-reaching importance, the two were in disagreement on nine. On two others--1951 tax hikes, and fair employment practices--they were in partial accord on programs but did not agree on extent.

They were in agreement on six issues--the European Recovery Plan, federal aid to education, a comprehensive federal housing program, expanded social security coverage, Defense Production Act (a proposal for its extension), and for cloture, or limitation on Senate debate.

	Issues	Disagreed
Agriculture	6	4
Civil Rights	6	2
Defense	6	4
Foreign Policy	14	10
Economic Controls	6	6
Economy, Spending	6	5
Labor	6	4
Housing, Education	6	1
Monopoly, States Rights and Security	5	5
Taxes	6	3
Totals	67	44

On Foreign Policy

The survey showed sharp disagreements on foreign policy but even in this field the differences sometimes were ones of degree. For example, both favored the authorization for Marshall Plan economic aid for Europe. Taft opposed the North Atlantic treaty and military aid, however, disagreeing with the President. Later the Senator said he believed the commitment, once made, should be honored.

Mr. Truman and Sen. Taft usually have been poles apart on foreign policy, with a few notable exceptions such as approval of ERP, Greek-Turkish aid, and displaced persons legislation.

During 1951, they carried on a nation-wide debate through the press on the question of sending U.S. ground troops to Europe and on the conduct of the Korean war and Administration policy in the Far East.

Their preoccupation with foreign policy promises to make it a major issue in the 1952 campaign. Sen. Taft has ventured to predict that it will be the No. One issue. Mr. Truman has voiced hope that it will not be an issue. But if it is, he warned Republicans--including Sen. Taft, recently the author of a book on foreign policy--it will be the best issue that the Democrats have.

Points of disagreement on foreign policy between the President and the Ohio Senator, besides military aid to the Atlantic Pact nations, included technical assistance to underdeveloped areas, cuts in the European Recovery program, continuing the reciprocal trade program with the "peril point" amendment added to protect domestic industry, the British loan and the Bretton Woods international monetary agreement.

Housing, Education

In the fields of education and housing, in which the two show most agreement at the present time, Sen. Taft has changed his previous stands to parallel those of Mr. Truman. Whereas he once opposed comprehensive federal programs in both fields, he has more recently sponsored legislation providing for such aid.

Sen. Taft has voted for cloture many times, and Mr. Truman also has favored cloture (limitation of Senate debate) as a means of pushing civil rights legislation through the Senate. On the other hand, Sen. Taft supported a new Senate cloture rule in 1949 which made limitation of debate in the Senate harder to invoke than ever. Mr. Truman vigorously protested the new rule, which choked off an Administration attempt to push a Fair Employment Practices Act through Congress.

Sen. Taft has maintained that government spending was leading the nation down the path of socialism; Mr. Truman has held it necessary to spend freely for defense and other government services during the "cold war." They have had many a legislative battle over cuts in federal programs, particularly in non-defense items like public power.

Sen. Taft has favored reductions in such well-known programs as school lunch and rivers and harbors and flood control projects. But they both were in favor of extensive revision of the federal social security program in 1950.

Taxes, Controls

Sen. Taft has shown a consistent dislike for the Administration's program designed to control inflation. Mr. Truman was particularly opposed to two Republican-backed amendments to the 1951 Defense Production Act which Taft supported: A prohibition on the use of slaughtering quotas and a provision that cost increases be passed on to consumers.

Likewise, Sen. Taft has been strongly opposed to Mr. Truman's tax measures calling for higher corporate and income taxes. As an influential member of the Senate Finance Committee, Sen. Taft has fought hard to cut down or curtail the President's tax proposals. In their years as Senate colleagues, however, Mr. Truman and Sen. Taft were in agreement on such major tax votes as pay-as-you-go and the 1944 tax bill which President Roosevelt vetoed.

In recent years they have had extreme differences in the field of labor legislation, but they voted together on some major labor legislation, while Senate colleagues. It has been one of the prime aims of the Truman Administration to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act which went on the statute books in 1947.

On the other hand in 1946, when President Truman proposed drafting railroad workers into the Army as a last-ditch effort to break up a nation-wide rail strike, Sen. Taft put up a vigorous fight to defeat the legislation. It never became law.

Truman-Taft Stands -- Point By Point

Here is a point-by-point comparison of stands taken by the two leaders. It has been organized around 11 broad topics: Agriculture, Civil Rights, Clean Politics, Defense, Foreign Policy, Economic Controls, Economy and Spending, Housing and Education, Labor, Taxes, and Monopoly, States Rights and Security.

Agriculture

President Truman and Sen. Taft often have been at odds on farm legislation, and their differences occurred long before the emergence of the Brannan plan, which the Republicans labeled "socialistic" and which Mr. Truman supported. This plan, a strong campaign issue with the Republicans for 1952, would do away with the parity formula on many farm items and pay direct subsidies to farmers instead. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 134-135).

On the question of parity, President Truman and Sen. Taft, while colleagues in the Senate, agreed in 1942 that farm labor should not be included in figuring a parity formula, although a Senate bipartisan majority passed a farm bloc amendment to include farm labor costs in the parity formula. Later in 1942, Mr. Truman and Sen. Taft voted for a substitute farm bill which did not include the farm labor provision. The same year Sen. Taft favored and Mr. Truman opposed an amendment, rejected by bipartisan vote, prohibiting any sales of government-held wheat below the parity price for corn. In 1940, on a Party Unity vote, Mr. Truman had favored and Sen. Taft opposed earmarking $212 million for farm parity payments.

In 1948 Mr. Taft opposed a measure continuing wartime price supports instead of the then-new Aiken long-range plan which provided for reorganization of soil conservation activities and for a permanent flexible price support system, based on a revised parity formula. The substitute measure, which had the support of the President, was defeated by a Party Unity vote. Finally Congress agreed to a much-amended version of the Aiken plan, just before adjournment. (CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, pp. 53, 72).

90 PER CENT SUPPORT

The following year, 1949, the President and Sen. Taft both opposed a provision requiring 90 per cent of parity support for basic crops under marketing quotas or acreage allotments. It was rejected by bipartisan vote. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 177). Congress finally passed a farm bill which was contrary to the President's proposal to provide a trial run for the Brannan plan, thereby putting off the Brannan plan fight until after the 1950 elections. As passed, it provided for 90 per cent price supports for basic commodities during the first year of operation, and gradual introduction of the Senate's 75-90 per cent flexible support program afterwards. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 131).

Sen. Taft was not recorded in 1951 on Senate passage of the bill extending sugar import and production quotas, which Mr. Truman favored. The measure had bipartisan support. In 1947 Sen. Taft and a GOP majority favored the bill providing price support for wool -- a bill which Mr. Truman vetoed because it contained an import fee which he said was dangerous to the reciprocal trade program. (See page 92; also Vol. III, p. 190.)

Republicans have repeatedly cast protest votes against the operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation primarily because of the pile-up of huge government food surpluses. Votes on CCC extension and increased authority were settled by Party Unity vote in 1942, 1945, and 1950. Sen. Taft and the GOP majority cast opposing votes while Mr. Truman and the Democratic majority supported the measures. (CQ Almanac, Vol. I, p. 10, and Vol. VI, p. 102).

CONSUMER SUBSIDIES

In 1944 an amendment to provide the CCC $1.5 billion a year for paying consumer subsidies won the vote of Mr. Truman while Sen. Taft opposed it. It was rejected on a Party Unity vote, with Republicans opposed, Democrats in favor of the program. Sen. Taft offered a compromise amendment which also was rejected. It would have permitted continuation of the program at an annual cost of $950 million, but would have terminated the milk subsidy.

The Senate that year finally agreed to a measure killing consumer subsidies. It was passed with the approval of Sen. Taft and over the opposition of Mr. Truman. Democrats split 25-25 on the vote; a majority of Republicans supported it.

In 1944 both Mr. Truman and Sen. Taft opposed legislation, rejected by a bipartisan vote, which suspended the federal tax on oleomargarine. In 1950, both parties, Mr. Truman and Sen. Taft all favored repeal of the oleo tax. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 97).

In 1943 Sen. Taft favored and Mr. Truman opposed a blanket draft deferment for farm labor. The provision passed with bipartisan support. In the same year Mr. Truman favored and Sen. Taft opposed continuing the Farm Security Administration, which conducted a farm tenancy program. The FSA measure won bipartisan support in the Senate.

AGRICULTURE ISSUES

Here are the stands taken by the two leaders on six farm issues, and those of the party majorities. Checks indicate a stand for a proposal, the crosses opposition to it.

Civil Rights

A comparison of the stands and voting records of President Truman and Sen. Taft indicated that they often have been in agreement on civil rights legislation. Both have favored several attempts to limit debate to bring civil rights issues to a vote in the Senate. Both opposed an attempt to kill a Presidentially-appointed Fair Employment Practices Committee in 1944. But in 1949, they differed on a new Senate cloture rule.

Mr. Truman and Sen. Taft were in favor of cloture on anti-poll tax bills in 1942, 1944, and 1946. On all three occasions, the Democratic majority opposed and the Republican majority favored limitation of debate. (CQ Almanac, Vol. II, p. 568).

Mr. Truman sought to push through the Senate in 1950 a Fair Employment Practices Act providing for a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission. The Senate did not vote on the proposal, but voted on a motion to limit debate in order to take up consideration of the bill. Here again Sen. Taft and the GOP majority voted for cloture; the Democratic majority against. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 542).

1944 FEPC VOTE

The last Senate vote on FEPC itself came in 1944 when the Senate voted on an amendment by Sen. Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) to an appropriations bill. It would have stricken funds for a Presidentially-appointed temporary Fair Employment Practices Committee. The Senate rejected the amendment by a bipartisan majority, and both Mr. Truman and Sen. Taft were against it.

In 1949 Mr. Truman and Senate Democratic leaders made an effort to liberalize the Senate cloture rule (limitation of debate) as a preliminary to clearing the way for civil rights legislation. The effort ended in failure, however, as the Senate voted for a stricter cloture provision than the 1917 rule then in force. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 583).

With a bipartisan majority of the Senate, Taft voted for the stricter Senate rule. Truman vigorously opposed the new rule. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 671).

A week earlier, on March 10, Sen. Taft joined 15 Republicans and 17 Democrats in a cloture petition to break a filibuster against the rules change then in progress.

He differed with his party majority in agreeing with an important, though technical, ruling by Vice President Alben W. Barkley: That cloture applied to a motion to consider a resolution amending the cloture ruling. The Barkley ruling was rejected, 41-46, on a Party Unity vote. Mr. Truman, of course, favored the Barkley ruling. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, pp. 586ff., 670).

SERVICEMEN'S VOTING

There were several votes on permitting servicemen to ballot which were taken in the Senate while Mr. Truman and Sen. Taft were Senate colleagues. In 1942, Sen. Taft and all other Senate Republicans favored giving servicemen absentee voting rights in primaries, and favored suspending the state poll taxes for servicemen. Mr. Truman and the Democratic majority opposed both measures.

In 1943 both opposed a measure providing for a state system of soldier voting, which was supported by the GOP majority, opposed (24-25) by a slim Democratic majority. In 1944, Sen. Taft and the GOP majority favored and Mr. Truman and the Democratic majority opposed a "states rights" soldier vote bill. As the legislation was finally passed, Mr. Truman and the Democratic majority favored, and Sen. Taft and the GOP majority opposed it. It required servicemen to vote by state ballot if their states permitted them to do so, but otherwise permitted use of the federal ballot when state election authorities allowed such ballots to be counted.

In 1941, Sen. Taft and a GOP majority favored an amendment to the lend-lease bill stating that the legislation gave the President no authority to censor the press or radio; Mr. Truman and the Democratic majority opposed this provision.

Clean Politics

While both served in the Senate, Mr. Truman and Sen. Taft went on record several times on clean politics legislation.

Both favored passage in 1940 of a clean state politics bill which applied the provisions of the Hatch Act to state and local employees. The purpose was to cut down the political activities of state and local government employees. The bill was passed by a bipartisan vote.

Mr. Truman favored and Sen. Taft opposed an amendment, which barely scraped through the Senate, limiting campaign gifts to $5,000. The GOP majority opposed the amendment; the Democratic majority favored it.

Mr. Truman favored and Sen. Taft opposed an attempt to strike out restrictions in the original Hatch Act relative to political activity. A Democratic majority favored the provision; a GOP majority opposed it. It was defeated by a close vote.

All of these votes were taken a decade ago, and there is no recent comparison on these votes.

Defense

Mr. Truman and Sen. Taft frequently differed on defense legislation. Sen. Taft indicated by his votes that he would have used a brake on military activities and spending more than did the President.

A major goal of the military, and one which President Truman advocated, was the institution of a universal military training program. UMT came to a Senate vote in 1951. Sen. Taft voted for an amendment to the 1951 military service act to eliminate the UMT provision. The proposal was rejected by a bipartisan vote.

When this amendment was rejected, Sen. Taft offered another to limit the application of the measure to four years or less if so specified by Congress. A majority of Republicans voted for the Taft amendment while a majority of Democrats opposed it.

DISAGREE ON DETAILS

Under the same legislation the military and President Truman sought Congressional authority to put the minimum draft age at 18, for two years of military service. Sen. Taft favored several amendments to raise the minimum draft age and to lower the ceiling on the overall number of military personnel on active duty. On these votes the Republican majority voted with Sen. Taft, the Democratic majority against him. On the final vote on the measure, providing for a continuation of selective service and a UMT program to begin after the emergency, there was overwhelming bipartisan support, in which both Mr. Truman and Sen. Taft concurred. (Page 274.)

In earlier votes on selective service, Mr. Truman in August, 1941, voted for extension while Sen. Taft opposed the measure (which finally squeaked through the House by a one-vote margin.) Passage in the Senate was by Party Unity vote, with the Democrats in favor, the Republicans opposed. The Republicans previously had lined up to back a proposal by Sen. Taft to extend the service of draftees for only six months, the service of National Guardsmen for one year. This plan was rejected.

And in 1948 Sen. Taft voted for a peactime military draft of men 19-25 for a period of two years, as did a bipartisan majority of the Senate. Mr. Truman favored this program. (CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, p. 267).

Although there was lengthy debate over the unification of the armed services, no record vote on a major part of the bill was taken in 1947 or 1949. In 1947 Sen. Taft obtained adoption of an amendment limiting the sphere of the National Security Council to matters strictly affecting national defense. This was a non-record vote. (CQ Almanac, Vol. III, p. 459).

FUNDS FOR DEFENSE

Both in 1949 and in 1951, major efforts were made to cut certain defense expenditures. In 1949 the Senate, by bipartisan vote and with the approval of both Mr. Truman and Sen. Taft, cut Air Force funds by $577,755,000, to reduce air groups from 58 to 48. The House had increased the appropriation to provide for 10 more groups, over the opposition of the White House and without the recommendation of the Defense Department. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 263).

In 1951 there were three record votes in the Senate on cuts in military funds, including a provision to reduce the number of Air Force officers entitled to draw extra flying pay. Sen. Taft voted for all three, as did the Republican majority, while the Democratic majority and Mr. Truman opposed them. One was adopted, two were rejected. (Page 131.) In addition, the Senate by voice vote accepted a 2.5 per cent reduction in military funds.

President Truman and Sen. Taft were on opposite sides of the fence in 1951, however, on legislation increasing pensions for veterans with non-service-connected disability. Mr. Truman vetoed the legislation on grounds of economy and because it singled out one group of handicapped persons for aid. Mr. Taft and a bipartisan majority of the Senate voted to override the President's veto, 69-9. (Page 295.)

Foreign Policy

In the field of foreign policy -- which Mr. Truman wanted to keep out of the 1952 campaign and Sen. Taft said would be the No. 1 issue -- there were vital Truman-Taft differences for many years.

They were on opposing sides on the questions of continuing the reciprocal trade program with the "peril point" amendment added, Bretton Woods monetary agreement, British loan, military aid to the Atlantic Pact nations, technical assistance to underdeveloped areas, cuts in the European Recovery Program and sending U.S. ground troops to Europe without Congressional approval.

They were in agreement on U.S. entry into a world organization, aid to Greece and Turkey, the authorization of the European Recovery Program, and entry of displaced persons into the United States.

Sen. Taft was in disagreement with his own GOP majority on Bretton Woods, military aid to NATO nations, and a 1949 cut in ERP funds. On other votes, the Senator voted with his party majority.

1951 DIFFERENCES

Most violent disagreements between Sen. Taft and Mr. Truman over foreign policy issues came during 1951. Sen. Taft, backed up the GOP majority, fought hard to require Congressional approval for sending U.S. ground troops to Europe, and voted for a resolution so advising Mr. Truman. The President bitterly opposed any curb on his Constitutional authority, as Commander-in-Chief, to send U.S. troops anywhere. A Democratic majority agreed with Mr. Truman. (Page 220.)

Sen. Taft was severe in his criticism of the conduct of the Korean war, for which he believed the Truman Administration responsible. He and his GOP colleagues sought to have hearings on the MacArthur controversy and on U.S. military policy in the Far East open to all Senators. Mr. Truman and Senate Democrats opposed this. (Page 242.)

On the question of sending economic and military aid abroad, Sen. Taft and Mr. Truman often were at loggerheads, but sometimes were in agreement. In 1948, Sen. Taft voted for the Marshall Plan, a key Administration foreign policy program to help put Western European countries "on their feet." A bipartisan majority of the Senate favored ERP. (CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, p. 216).

Sen. Taft sought, however, to cut the authorization of the European Recovery Program from $5.3 billion to $4 billion. This amendment split the Republicans down the middle, 23 voting for the amendment and 24 against it. The Democrats opposed it, and it was rejected 31-56. (CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, p. 178). Later Sen. Taft voted for ERP as "justified by the world battle against communism" although he considered it was "completely without economic justification."

Subsequently many attempts were made to cut down Administration requests for more funds for economic aid to European nations, some successful, some unsuccessful.

A key vote was taken on this point in 1949 when Sen. Taft and Sen. Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) sponsored an amendment providing for a 10 per cent cut in the second year's ERP authorization. It was opposed by Mr. Truman and rejected by a bipartisan majority, 23-54. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 428).

ECONOMIC AID CUT

A second key vote was taken in 1951 when the Senate accepted an amendment by Sen. Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.) to cut European economic aid by $250,000,000. A majority of Republicans, including Sen. Taft, voted for this amendment, while a majority of Democrats backed President Truman in opposing it on a close vote, 36-34. Sen. Taft was a co-sponsor of this amendment. (Page 210.)

After World War II, Sen. Taft sometimes favored, sometimes opposed outright military aid to foreign nations. Sen. Taft voted with the Republican majority in favor of extending aid to Greece and Turkey, most of it in the form of military assistance. Moreover, Sen. Taft voted against proposals to delete military aid from the bill or to table the bill. A Democratic majority joined the President in supporting this program in 1947. (CQ Almanac, Vol. III, p. 270).

Two years later, in 1949, Sen. Taft opposed extension of military aid to Western Europe. He split from the Republican majority, which favored this Administration program. Mr. Truman had a Democratic majority with him on this vote. Sen. Taft held: "It would certainly seem foolish to me to send arms if Russia is not about to invade (Western Europe)." (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 360, 431).

ON "PERIL POINTS"

Sen. Taft frequently fought in behalf of safeguarding domestic industry through a "peril point" amendment to the reciprocal trade program. This amendment directed the Tariff Commission to determine minimum tariff rates for protection of domestic industries, and required that if tariffs were set below that point, or if already lower were not raised to the minimum, full information be filed with Congress. A key vote on this provision--now incorporated into the law--came in 1949 when a majority of Republicans including Sen. Taft lined up against a majority of Democrats to favor the peril point amendment. Mr. Truman opposed peril points. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 430).

Sen. Taft opposed the Bretton Woods International Monetary Agreement in 1945 for a number of reasons including his conclusion that the United States would put up most of the money and receive "negligible benefit." Sen. Taft unsuccessfully sought to require countries using the fund to remove currency restrictions. A bipartisan majority favored Bretton Woods, which President Truman proposed. (CQ Almanac, Vol. I, pp. 466, 468).

Sen. Taft also opposed the British Loan in 1946 on the ground, he said, that lending and borrowing make bad friends. He proposed a substitute, which was rejected, to make an outright gift of $1,250,000,000 to Britain. Republicans split on the British Loan, 18, including Sen. Taft, opposing it and 17 voting with the Democratic majority in favor of it. The loan was a key part of Administration policy. (CQ Almanac, Vol. II, pp. 280-82, 484.)

Sen. Taft and a majority of Republicans opposed beginning the Point Four program in 1950. This program, proposed by President Truman in his 1949 inaugural address, provided for U.S. technical assistance to underdeveloped areas of the world. Sen. Taft called it "a new field for spreading government money around the world." The Point Four program scraped through the Senate 37-36 on a Party Unity vote. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, pp. 215, 267).

AGREE ON WORLD ORGANIZATION

Sen. Taft and Mr. Truman voted with a bipartisan majority in 1943 in favor of a resolution advocating United States membership in a world organization to maintain "international peace and security."

They were also in agreement in 1948 on a program to admit displaced persons to the United States for resettlement. It passed by a bipartisan majority, with only one Republican vote cast against the bill on final passage. (CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, p. 218).

A month before the beginning of World War II, the Senate majority voted against repealing the neutrality act. Mr. Truman favored repeal; Sen. Taft opposed it.

They both voted for passage of new and less strict neutrality legislation in 1940. They both opposed a nation-wide referendum on war overseas. Sen. Taft proposed limiting the authority of the President to employ U.S. armed forces beyond the Western Hemisphere, while Mr. Truman opposed such limitation on the President's authority over U.S. military action.

In 1941 Sen. Taft opposed and Mr. Truman favored lend-lease, which passed the Senate on a Party-Unity vote at the request of President Roosevelt and the Democratic leaders of Congress. Sen. Taft proposed, as a substitute, lending $2 billion to Great Britain, Greece and Canada to purchase war materials in the United States, but it was defeated in the Senate.

Economic Controls

Mr. Truman and Sen. Taft long have differed sharply on price control and other economic policies. Their differences, however, were not so sharp, as those between Mr. Truman and Sen. John W. Bricker (R Ohio), 1944 GOP Vice Presidential candidate.

Mr. Truman and the Democratic majority opposed the following amendments to the 1951 Defense Production Act which Sen. Taft and the GOP majority supported: prohibiting the OPS from placing any restrictions, quotas, or other limitations on livestock slaughtering; and prohibiting price ceilings lower than either the price prevailing just before the regulation or the price prevailing Jan. 25-Feb. 24, 1951.

They both opposed, however, amendments banning ceilings on any farm product prior to the enactment of the 1951 Defense Production Act, terminating rent control except in critical defense areas, prohibiting any OPS regulation reducing the percentage margin of profit of any wholesaler or retailer, and prohibiting ceiling prices on milk or butter fat until the Secretary of Agriculture determined they were fair and reasonable. The Democrats opposed all these provisions while the GOP majority favored all except the termination of rent control.

Sen. Taft and Mr. Truman were in agreement on final passage of the Defense Production Act, which provided not only for continued price and rent control, but also controls on credit and materials. Both parties supported the bill on final passage. (Page 438.)

Republicans and Democrats were at odds in 1951 over the so-called Capehart amendment worked out in the Senate-House conference on the Defense Production Act. The provision allowed sellers to pass on to consumers certain increases in costs which occurred between the start of the Korean war and July 26, 1951.

On Oct. 4, the Senate voted to revise the Capehart provision, to direct that prices reflect only "necessary and unavoidable" cost increases, including those for labor, material and transportation. President Truman and a majority of Democrats heartily favored the revision. Sen. Taft and a majority of Republicans opposed it. (Page 464.)

ON RENT CONTROL

In 1950, Sen. Taft voted against a measure extending federal rent control for six months and continuing rent control thereafter by local option. Mr. Truman signed the conference report, although he had sought a stronger measure. Democrats supported the conference report while the GOP majority opposed it. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 726).

During balloting on the 1950 Defense Production Act, Sen. Taft voted to eliminate selective controls and to tie wage controls to price controls. Mr. Truman opposed the amendment as did a majority of the Democrats. Most Republicans lined up for it. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 727).

In 1948, Sen. Taft opposed an amendment granting the President's request for stand-by rationing and price-wage control authority, and in 1947 he opposed a somewhat similar Presidential request for mandatory priority, inventory controls and allocation powers. A majority of Democrats favored the legislation; Republicans opposed it. (CQ Almanac, Vol. III, p. 740; CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, p. 386).

In 1947, the Ohio Senator voted for an amendment providing for a 15 per cent rent boost. It was opposed by Mr. Truman. A majority of Republicans voted with Taft, while a majority of Democrats were against the boost. (CQ Almanac, Vol. III, p. 243).

PRICE CONTROLS

In 1945 the Senator sponsored an amendment to the price control extension bill requiring prices to reflect 1939 profit margins. It was defeated, with the approval of Mr. Truman, on a Party Unity vote, with Republicans for and Democrats against it. (CQ Almanac, Vol. 1, p. 381). Both Republicans and Democrats agreed to continuation of price control in 1945.

In 1946 Sen. Taft introduced an amendment to the price control extension legislation which would have allowed prices to reflect cost increases. It was defeated 40-40 on a Party Unity vote, the GOP for, the Democrats against. (CQ Almanac, Vol. II, p. 591).

After a Presidential veto of the first 1946 price control extension bill, both Democrats and Republicans agreed to a measure continuing controls for another year, subject to systematic decontrols by a Price Decontrol Board. Both Sen. Taft and Mr. Truman approved the measure. (CQ Almanac, Vol. II, p. 592).

Economy and Spending

Major differences arose between Mr. Truman and Sen. Taft over government economy in non-defense programs.

For example, Sen. Taft repeatedly supported cuts in the Administration's foreign aid program, such as the Dirksen amendment to cut European economic aid which the Senate tacked on to the Mutual Security Act in 1951. Mr. Truman vigorously opposed such cuts. (See Foreign Policy section.)

But most differences between Mr. Taft and Mr. Truman on government economy arose from the frequent attempts made in the Senate to cut down federal domestic programs or prevent new federal programs from being launched. Mr. Taft usually did not favor extending as much federal aid for such programs as the President did. Housing was the one big exception--both agreed more federal aid was needed. (See Housing section).

A major drive was launched by an economy bloc in the Senate in 1950 to reduce by 10 per cent funds for all the executive agencies and programs, except the Defense Department and certain emergency programs. Mr. Truman bitterly opposed the cut, but it was approved by the Senate on a Party Unity vote. Mr. Taft and the Senate GOP majority favored it. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 149).

BRANNAN FARM PLAN

Sen. Taft's opposition to the farm program sponsored by Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan prompted him to introduce an amendment to the omnibus funds bill in 1950 designed to prevent the Department from "propagandizing" the Brannan plan. It was accepted by the Senate by voice vote. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 123). (Also see Agriculture section).

The Senate in 1951 took a key vote on an amendment cutting funds for river, harbor and flood control projects by 10 per cent. The amendment was defeated on a Party Unity vote, the Democratic majority and Mr. Truman opposed to it, Mr. Taft and the GOP majority in favor of it. (Page 140.)

In 1950 Sen. Taft obtained Senate approval by voice vote of a $540,000 project to provide flood control at Roseville, Ohio. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 124).

PUBLIC POWER

Mr. Truman and Sen. Taft often were at odds on the government's power program. In 1942, Sen. Taft voted for an amendment denying authority to the Tennessee Valley Authority to use its revenues from power and light as a revolving fund, thereby requiring TVA to seek in Congress direct appropriations to meet all expenditures. The Republicans favored the amendment; the Democrats split, 29-29, on it.

In 1948, Sen. Taft opposed and Mr. Truman favored a $3.6 million item to start an $84 million TVA steam plant. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, pp. 112, 125). The Senate passed the provision on a Party Unity vote, with Democrats for; GOP against.

In 1944, 1946, and 1949, key votes were taken on limiting the construction of transmission lines by the Department of Interior. Mr. Taft and the GOP majority favored the limitations; Mr. Truman and the Democratic majority opposed them. (CQ Almanac, Vol. II, p. 247; Vol. V, p. 263).

On both occasions that the St. Lawrence seaway and power project came before the Senate for a vote -- in 1944 and in 1948 -- Sen. Taft and a bipartisan majority opposed the legislation while Mr. Truman favored it. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 328). Sen. Taft said the federal government should not undertake a large increase in public works program costs such as the project would entail. (CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, p. 283).

PLANNING, CROP INSURANCE

In 1943 Sen. Taft and the GOP majority favored terminating the National Resources Planning Board, while Mr. Truman and the Democratic majority sought to retain it. During the same year, however, Sen. Taft and the GOP majority opposed terminating the federal crop insurance program while the Democratic majority favored ending it. Mr. Truman was not recorded on the crop insurance issue.

Sen. Taft became a leading advocate of federal aid to education (see Education), but favored cutbacks in the school lunch program. In 1946 he sponsored an amendment to cut program funds from $100 million to $57.5 million.

He also sponsored an amendment to eliminate a provision for nutrition education, training of supervisors, and purchase of equipment. Both amendments were rejected, the Democratic majority backing up Mr. Truman in opposing them; the Republican majority siding with Sen. Taft in favor. (CQ Almanac, Vol. II, pp. 41, 57).

RECONVERSION BENEFIT

During the reconversion period, in 1945, President Truman asked Congress to provide federal assistance to the states to provide a maximum of $25 a week for 26 weeks to the unemployed. Legislation carrying these provisions was defeated in the Senate by a bipartisan vote. Mr. Taft opposed it. (CQ Almanac, Vol. I, pp. 483-4).

In 1948, Mr. Taft and a bipartisan majority voted to override a Presidential veto of a provision cancelling social security coverage for salesmen, life insurance agents and piece workers. (CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, p. 165).

However, in 1950, the Senate bipartisan majority, including Sen. Taft, voted for widespread expansion of the social security program. The 1950 bill granted social security coverage to 10 million more persons and increased existing benefits 70-100 per cent. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 201).

Housing and Education

A compilation showed Sen. Taft's voting record on housing and federal aid to education to be unusual. At one time he opposed comprehensive federal programs in both fields but later in his Senate career sponsored legislation in both fields and fought for its acceptance in the Senate.

In 1943 Sen. Taft made a motion in the Senate, which carried by a vote of 53-26, to shelve a federal aid to education bill by sending it back to the Education and Labor Committee. The Administration sought vainly to prevent recommittal on the ground that the program would be delayed "for a long while." Then a Senator, Mr. Truman was unrecorded on this vote. A bipartisan majority supported the Taft motion.

In 1948 and again in 1949, Sen. Taft was co-sponsor of a measure to provide federal aid to elementary and secondary education. Legislation was passed by the Senate each year, but not by the House. Wary of federal control of the nation's educational system, Sen. Taft said that the bill, which provided $300 million a year for grants to states on a sliding scale to equalize educational opportunities, merely required a federal audit to see that the money was used for primary and secondary education.

In both years, Sen. Taft got a bipartisan majority to support his legislation, which was warmly endorsed by President Truman. (CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, p. 146, Vol. V, p. 327).

Because of opposition in the House, however, such legislation never has been passed by Congress.

In 1939, first year that Sen. Taft was in the Senate, he introduced an amendment to cut the loan authority for the U.S. Housing Authority, which was charged with developing housing projects for farm families of low income in rural areas. Mr. Truman and the Democratic majority voted against the Taft amendment. The Republican majority lined up with Sen. Taft. Both Mr. Truman and Sen. Taft voted that year to increase the total amount of mortgage insurance that the Federal Housing Administration might have outstanding.

In 1946 Sen. Taft sponsored with Sens. Allen J. Ellender (D La.) and then Sen. Robert F. Wagner (D N.Y.), a comprehensive housing bill which included provisions for low-rent public housing and slum clearance. This bill was recommended for passage by President Truman, and the Senate passed it by voice vote in 1946, after Taft, Wagner and Ellender had conducted months of hearings on the need for better housing. (CQ Almanac, Vol. II, p. 262).

In 1948, Sen. Taft led the fight for Congressional approval of the W-E-T bill, but a substitute measure was passed. A key vote was taken on an amendment by Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) to strike out the public housing clause. It was defeated by a bipartisan vote. Taft opposed the Cain amendment, as did the President. (CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, p. 164).

LOW-COST HOUSING

In 1949 the Senate passed by bipartisan vote a housing measure supported by both Sen. Taft and the President which provided for a program of low-cost housing and slum clearance and authorized the construction of 810,000 units of public housing over a five-year period. The House later passed the same measure, and it became the National Housing Act of 1949. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 274).

In 1950, Sen. Taft and the President differed on the 1950 Middle Income Housing Act. A key vote came on an amendment by Taft's colleague, John W. Bricker (R Ohio), to delete a provision for direct loans to housing cooperatives through a federal mortgage corporation. Sen. Taft, and the GOP majority, supported the Bricker amendment, which the Senate passed, 43-38. The President opposed the amendment, as did a Democratic majority. The final passage of the legislation was by voice vote. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 200).

President Truman recommended a defense housing measure in 1951 which was passed by the Senate without a record vote, but with Sen. Taft's support. A roll call was taken, however, on an amendment of Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.) to cut down the number of public housing units to be constructed in the 1952 fiscal year. The amendment was rejected on a Party Unity vote, 25-47. Sen. Taft, President Truman and a Democratic majority opposed it; the GOP majority favored it. (Page 118.)

Labor Issues

Although President Truman and Sen. Taft generally were regarded as being poles apart on labor issues, their records did not entirely bear this out. In the earlier years they were often in agreement on labor issues. After Mr. Truman became President, they generally disagreed.

The first big split came in 1946, when the President proposed to draft railroad workers into the army if they failed to halt a nation-wide strike. Sen. Taft vigorously opposed the legislation because of the drastic Presidential powers it embodied. The Senate, however, passed it, 61-20, without the draft provision, but with a provision for federal injunctions in labor disputes. Taft and the GOP majority voted for the watered-down bill, which the Democratic majority opposed. It died in conference. (CQ Almanac, Vol. II, p. 307).

CASE BILL

The next big disagreement between Sen. Taft and the President came over the so-called Case bill which was a forerunner of the Taft-Hartley Act. It set up a mediation board and otherwise limited the right to strike. This measure passed the Senate May 25, 1946, by a Party Unity vote, 49-29, Sen. Taft and the GOP majority voting for the bill, the Democratic majority against it. The President vetoed the legislation and the House failed to override the veto. (CQ Almanac, Vol. II, pp. 325, 705).

An apparently permanent split between Sen. Taft and Mr. Truman in the field of labor legislation developed in 1947 when the Senate passed the Taft-Hartley Labor Management Relations bill, which the President promptly vetoed. Congress overrode the veto, and the legislation became one of the most controversial statutes ever put on the books.

The Act outlawed the closed shop, jurisdictional strikes and secondary boycotts. It prohibited certification of foremen's unions and bargaining representatives; made labor unions liable to suits; required non-Communist affidavits from union officials and banned union political expenditures. It set up a new procedure to settle strikes, divided NLRB authority between the board and the general counsel and authorized injunctions against strikes threatening the public safety.

TRUMAN: NOT WORKABLE

The Senate passed this bill by a vote of 68-24, with Sen. Taft leading the fight. The Republican majority favored the bill, while the Democrats split, 21 for, 21 against.

President Truman vetoed the bill, saying that it was not workable, would not improve relationships between employers and employees, and was unfair to labor. (CQ Almanac, Vol. III, pp. 296, 308). The Senate voted 68-25 to override the veto, with Taft and the GOP majority in favor of overriding and the Democrats split -- 20 for, 22 against.

During the 81st Congress, an unsuccessful effort was made to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act. One of the key votes in the Senate was on an amendment by then-Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.). It proposed to delete a provision for anti-strike injunctions in a Taft substitute measure, and was rejected on a close 44-46 vote, along party lines. Mr. Truman favored the amendment, and Sen. Taft opposed it.

The Ohio Senator then successfully sponsored a measure restating the major provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act, and it was passed by the Senate on a Party Unity vote, 49-44, with most Republicans backing Taft. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 470).

In 1951 came the first amendment to the Taft-Hartley Act, and both Mr. Truman and Sen. Taft supported it, along with a bipartisan majority in the Senate. (Page 268.)

It provided for validating 4,600 union shop elections which the Supreme Court had declared invalid because they were held before top officials of the CIO and AFL complied with provisions of the Taft-Hartley law that required filing of financial statements and non-Communist affidavits. The measure also dispensed with a requirement that an election must be held before a labor organization and an employer entered into a union-shop agreement.

WANTED ISSUE IN PLATFORM

Labor organizations continued to demand the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, and President Truman made it plain that he would favor such a plank in the 1952 Democratic platform. Sen. Taft vigorously opposed repeal, although he did suggest some changes in the Act.

When Mr. Truman and Sen. Taft were Senate colleagues, they often voted the same way on labor legislation. They (and a bipartisan majority) favored a pay raise for rail workers in 1943, Presidential authority to seize struck defense plants in 1941, and passage of an anti-labor spy bill in 1940. Both opposed legislation in 1944 to require labor unions, chambers of commerce, farm cooperatives and other tax-exempt organizations to file information on their income and other fiscal reports.

However, they differed in 1940 on an amendment providing for industrial conscription along with military conscription. Mr. Truman and a bipartisan majority favored the amendment; Sen. Taft opposed it.

Sen. Taft favored and Mr. Truman opposed the Smith-Connally "no-strike" bill in 1943. It gave the President statutory authority to seize war facilities, provided penalties for instigating strikes at government-operated plants, and gave statutory authority to the War Labor Board.

The bill was aimed at curbing, in particular, labor disturbances in coal mines. President Roosevelt vetoed the bill, however, on the ground that it would "stimulate labor unrest." On the key vote to override the veto, Sen. Taft and a bipartisan majority voted to override, and Mr. Truman voted against overriding. The vote was 56-25. The veto was overridden by both the House and Senate.

Monopoly, States Rights and Security

Mr. Truman and Sen. Taft frequently disagreed on legislation dealing with monopoly, states rights and security, CQ's survey of their records revealed.

They were at odds in 1948 on legislation which exempted railroads from provisions of anti-trust laws insofar as rate-fixing agreements were concerned. President Truman vetoed the measure known as the Reed-Bulwinkle Act, but the veto was overridden on a Party Unity vote, Mr. Taft voting, with his party's majority, to override. (CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, pp. 335, 388).

Sen. Taft favored legislation, known as the "basing point" bill, which passed the Senate in 1950, but Mr. Truman vetoed the bill. It provided for legalizing freight absorption and certain price discriminations if done in good faith and not to establish monopoly. It also permitted use of delivered-pricing practices in some cases. (CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, p. 826, Vol. V, pp. 564, 722).

In 1945 Sen. Taft voted for exempting the insurance business from federal anti-trust laws and affirming states' right to regulate and tax insurance companies. Such legislation was passed by the Senate on a bipartisan vote. Mr. Truman, then a Senator, was not recorded on this measure. (CQ Almanac, Vol. I, p. 104).

ON "TIDELANDS"

Legislation renouncing the claim of the federal government to lands lying beneath the tidewaters and navigable waters within state boundaries was passed by the Senate in 1946. Sen. Taft and the GOP majority were in favor of the legislation; the Democratic majority opposed it. Mr. Truman vetoed the bill, and the House upheld his veto. (CQ Almanac, Vol. II, p. 593).

A revision of the natural gas act designed to assure exemption for independent gatherers and producers of natural gas from the jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission passed the Senate in 1950. It was promptly vetoed by President Truman on the ground that the Commission had authority to regulate independent producers who supplied more than 80 per cent of the gas produced. Sen. Taft joined the Democratic majority to favor the bill while a majority of his GOP colleagues voted against it. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, pp. 598, 722).

President Truman frequently has been at loggerheads with Sen. Taft over the handling of the nation's security problem. The Senate passed in 1950 legislation which required Communists and Communist-front organizations to register, barred Communists from government and defense jobs, barred aliens from the U.S. who had been connected with a Communist or totalitarian regime or organization, and provided for the detention of any persons engaged in sabotage and espionage. President Truman vetoed the bill as "unworkable" and the Senate, with the support of Sen. Taft and a bipartisan majority, overrode. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 390).

Taxes

President Truman and Sen. Taft frequently split on tax measures, but they differed more often in recent years than they did when they were both in the Senate.

In 1951 President Truman asked for a $10 billion boost in taxes, but Congress passed a measure raising only an estimated $5.6 billion in additional revenue. (Page 409.)

As a top ranking member of the Senate Finance Committee, Sen. Taft helped pare down the President's request. The Senate Committee decided to delete a provision in the House bill applying the excess-profits tax to all earnings in excess of 75 per cent of income during the base period.

The effect of this amendment was to restore the existing provision applying excess-profits tax to earnings in excess of 85 per cent of income during the base period. It was agreed to, 62-20, Sept. 25. (Page 427.)

Mr. Truman favored a sharp boost in corporate taxes and opposed this amendment. Sen. Taft and a bipartisan majority favored the provision.

KEY TAX VOTE

Another key vote on the 1951 tax bill was on an amendment by Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) to delete a provision which permitted the creation of a family partnership by gift even though the "partners" performed no service to the partnership, formed only for tax purposes. The provision was to be retroactive to 1939. (See page 534.)

The Humphrey amendment had the approval of Mr. Truman but was opposed by Mr. Taft and a bipartisan majority of the Senate on a vote of 27-58. So the partnership provision was retained.

The Republican 80th Congress was determined to cut taxes while President Truman resisted a tax reduction because of the resultant loss of revenue. He was successful in beating back two GOP tax cuts, supported by Sen. Taft, in 1947. (CQ Almanac, Vol. III, pp. 340, 356, 509, 521).

1948 TAX REDUCTION

In 1948, however, the Republicans succeeded in writing and passing an income tax reduction bill over the President's veto. Every Republican and a majority of Democrats opposed the President on a vote of 77-10. (CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, p. 388).

Mr. Truman and Sen. Taft were in agreement on three key tax votes when they were Senate colleagues.

Both of them and a bipartisan majority in 1942 opposed a 50 per cent normal corporate tax rate, as against a 40 per cent rate.

BOTH OPPOSED FDR VETO

On a bipartisan vote Mr. Truman and the Ohio Senator favored approval of the conference report on the pay-as-you-go tax bill in 1943. In 1944 they voted with a bipartisan majority, 72-14, to override President Roosevelt's veto of a tax bill which Mr. Roosevelt considered an "aid for the greedy, not for the needy." This veto brought about the resignation of Alben W. Barkley (D Ky.) as majority leader. (Barkley was immediately re-elected to his post by his Democratic colleagues in the Senate).

In 1940, Sen. Taft and Mr. Truman were in disagreement on two tax bills. Mr. Truman and a Democratic majority favored passage of a bill boosting excess-profits taxes, the normal tax rate on corporations, and a five-year tax-free amortization of defense plants. Sen. Taft opposed this measure, which was passed by the Senate, 46-22.

They were also in disagreement in 1940 on an amendment by Pat McCarran (D Nev.) to a trade pact measure which forbade changes in excise taxes on imports of coal, lumber, oil and copper. It was rejected, 36-45, Mr. Truman and the Democratic majority opposed, and Sen. Taft and the GOP majority in favor of the amendment.

Anti-labor Spy Bill

As Senate colleagues they both favored passage of an anti-labor spy bill, and Presidential authority to seize struck defense plants. They both opposed, in 1944, legislation requiring labor unions and other tax-exempt organizations to file financial reports.

In the field of defense legislation their major differences have been over the draft--Taft opposed selective service in 1941--the initiation of universal military training and cuts in military funds. They both opposed a 1949 House attempt to increase the number of Air Force groups, but the Korean war altered their thinking on this type of economy.

The agriculture program outlined by Truman's Secretary of Agriculture, Charles F. Brannan, has never come to a vote in the Senate, but Sen. Taft has lambasted the plan as "socialistic" on many occasions in the past two years.

The President and Sen. Taft also have differed on farm parity programs, wartime consumer food subsidies (during World War II), wool support prices, and the operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation. They both favored elimination of the oleomargarine tax.

On Clean Politics

While both were in the Senate they favored extension of the Hatch "Clean Politics" Act to cover state and local employees. But Sen. Taft opposed a provision limiting campaign gifts to $5,000 while Mr. Truman favored a provision striking out restrictions in the original Hatch Act relative to political activity.

President Truman has vetoed several pieces of monopoly, states rights and security legislation which Mr. Taft has supported, namely: the Reed-Bulwinkle railroad rate-making bill, the basing point bill, a "states rights" tidelands oil bill, the Kerr natural gas bill, and the Internal Security Act of 1950.
